and some more recent publications on male animals. The earlier papers reported no effect of androgenic steroid. In the present study, although a number of all the rats given progestin, either alone or in combination with either diethylstilbestrol or hydrocortisone, had rapid and complete loss of body weight, those which received either 100 µg. or 200 µg. of progestin, or 100 µg.
of progestin plus 100 µg. of diethylstilbestrol, showed no significant difference in weight gain over the control group. This was true even though the progestin-treated rats were maintained on a diet which contained 10% protein, whereas the control group was fed a diet containing 20% protein. It is evident from these results that the lack of effect of progestin on growth in the rat is not due to its failure to stimulate protein synthesis.
It is also evident that the lack of effect of progestin on growth in the rat is not due to its failure to stimulate protein synthesis.

PREFACE

THIS volume closes an undertaking begun more years ago than I care to reckon. It would be tedious to offer excuses for the long delays which have interrupted its progress. I should like, however, to say a word in apology for one of its many shortcomings. A complete edition of the Dindshenchas ought obviously to include both the prose and the metrical versions, the more so that the prose is in part anterior to the verse: the latter is, in fact, as is explained in my Introduction, to some extent founded directly upon the prose. The reason for the procedure adopted in this edition is that when it was first undertaken the Prose Dindshenchas had just been published by Whitley Stokes in the Revue Celtique, and it would have seemed presumptuous for a novice to offer a fresh edition of material which had recently been handled by so eminent a scholar. There was nothing for it but to assume that anyone who might wish to study the verse would keep beside him Stokes' edition of the prose. It is, however, unfortunate that Stokes neglected almost entirely the older recension of the Dindshenchas, that of the Book of Leinster, and also adopted a method which obscured the true order of the later recension, that of the Rennes codex and of most other manuscripts. It is to be hoped that some day another scholar will publish an edition of the prose and verse together; if my attempt to prepare the ground is of some assistance in his task, I shall be well satisfied.

The Glossary appended to this volume makes no pretence to completeness. It is intended mainly as a help to students pending the publication of the Royal Irish Academy's Dictionary. Words which are sufficiently illustrated in the instalments of that Dictionary already published, or in Windisch's Wörterbuch, or in Meyer's Contributions to Irish Lexicography, are as a rule omitted. At the same time, I have thought it worth while to include examples of many common words whose various uses seemed to require fuller illustration than those authorities supply. In marking the genders of nouns, I have tried to follow the Middle Irish usage, so far as this could be ascertained: the neuter, being in the twelfth century already obsolescent, is only marked in cases where it is actually found in my text. The Glossary has also been used to call attention to rectifications of the text and translation made in the long list of Corrigenda.

The Indexes of Personal and Place Names are, it is hoped, nearly exhaustive; in the identification of places I have had to rely as a rule on the works of O'Donovan, Reeves, and Hogan, with occasional additions and corrections by recent writers, and a few suggestions of my own. A full investigation of the whole available material is very badly needed, but it could only be carried out by a combination of literary research and field-work, organised on a large scale.

I had hoped to add to my Introduction a chapter on metres, but have never been able to find the time required for an adequate treatment of the subject.

I have inscribed on another page the name of Robert Atkinson, at whose suggestion, or rather command, this work was first undertaken. He was in no way responsible for the faults of plan and execution of which its author is painfully conscious. Such as it is, let it be an offering to the memory of an inspiring teacher and a great scholar.

PART V.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO

THE DINDSHENCHAS.

I.—THE MANUSCRIPTS.

§ 1. THE Dindshenchas has been handed down in two recensions. Of the earlier, in its complete form in verse and prose, the sole surviving representative is preserved in the Book of Leinster (L), written about 1160. It occupies pp. 151–170 and 191–216 of the lithographed facsimile.

Parts of the prose sections of the same recension survive in two fragmentary MSS., both probably of the fifteenth century, Rawlinson B. 506 in the Bodleian Library (Bd.) and the Gaelic MS. xvi (also called Kilbride 12) in the National Library of Scotland (Ed.). Besides the prose, Bd. has also the poem Temair V; Ed. has five poems, Temair V, Loch Garman (part), Eithne (= Carn Furbaide), Tonn Chlidna, and Tuag Inbir (part).

§ 2. The following 13 manuscripts contain more or less complete copies of the second recension, both prose and verse:—

- 1 B = the Book of Ballymote (Royal Irish Academy 23. P. 12), pp. 349–410 of the facsimile.
- 2 R = the Rennes manuscript, ff. 90–125.
- 3 M = the Book of Uí Maine (R.Ir.Ae., Stowe D. II. 1), ff. 143–169.
- 4 Le = the Book of Lecan (R.Ir.Ac. 23. P. 2), pp. 461–525.
- 5 Y = the Yellow Book of Lecan (Trin. Coll. Dubl. H. 2. 16), pp. 438–455 of the facsimile.
- 6 S = R.Ir.Ae., Stowe D. II. 2.
- 7 S₂ = R.Ir.Ae., Stowe B. II. 2. A fragment.
- 8 S₃ = R.Ir.Ae., Stowe B. III. 1.
- 9 H = Trin. Coll. Dubl. 1322 (H. 3. 3).
- 10 B₂ = Trin. Coll. Dubl. 1295 (H. 2. 4), pp. 462–590, an 18th century copy of B.
- 11 H₂ = Trin. Coll. Dubl. 1289 (H. 1. 15), pp. 409–532; another 18th century copy of B.

- 12 H₄ = Trin. Coll. Dubl. 1317 (H. 2. 15 b), pp. 157-end, a copy of H.
13 V = R.Ir.Ac., Reeves 832, pp. 61-197.

Small groups of poems belonging in the main to the second recension occur in the following manuscripts:—

- 14 S₄ = R.Ir.Ac., Stowe D. IV. 2, ff. 55, 56.
15 E = Trin. Coll. Dubl. 1436 (E. 4. 1), pp. 85-88.
16 H₃ = Trin. Coll. Dubl. 1286 (H. 1. 12), pt. 2, pp. 97-end; a copy of E.
17 X = R.Ir.Ac., 23. N. 11, pp. 17-26.

A few detached copies of single poems occurring in other manuscripts have been mentioned in their places.

§ 3. It will be convenient to give here brief descriptions of the above manuscripts, ignoring 10-13, 16, and 17 as unimportant, before entering on a discussion of the contents and arrangement of L.

B.—The Book of Ballymote was written about the year 1400: see Atkinson's introduction to the facsimile for particulars as to the date and the scribes. A leaf is missing after p. 406 of the facsimile: the old foliation, probably due to the original scribe, passes from 226 to 228.

Aspiration is marked by tiny dots, which are often invisible in the photographic reproduction, and in the MS. itself are often hard to recognise with certainty. Long vowels are regularly left unmarked: on the other hand the vowel i is frequently distinguished by a diacritic stroke in order to prevent confusion between in and m, etc.

R.—This manuscript has been described by Dottin in Rev. Celt. xv. 79, seq. The Dindshenchas occupies ff. 90-125. Stokes thought that this section "was probably written in the fourteenth or fifteenth century" (Rev. Celt. xv. 272), and Meyer (Todd. Lect. xvii, introduction) is of the same opinion. There is no scribal note that throws any light upon the date. The copy of the Dindshenchas is the work of a single scribe, except the last page, as to which see V, § 2, infra. Two folios have been lost between f. 114 and f. 115 of the present numeration: (so Dottin, ut sup.; Stokes, in Rev. Celt. xv. 274, allows for the loss of only one folio, but a calculation of the amount of material wanting and of the number of lines per folio proves that Dottin is right).

The Royal Irish Academy possesses a set of photographs of this copy.

M.—The copy in the Book of Uí Maine was written in 1394 by Faelán Mac Gabhann. It is fully described in an article in Eriu x. 68, seq., where I have shown that the 21 articles following Druim Dairbrech are an interpolation, mainly in prose, drawn from a source which did not belong to the Second Recension, but was closely allied to Bd.-Ed. Most of these articles are repeated by the scribe in their proper place according to the order of the Second Recension, but a few (Bóand, Sinann, Loch Garman, Carn Furbaide) appear only in the interpolation (both prose and verse). The three articles following Ath Luain are in a different hand from the rest and of later date. The first of these, on Tuaim Dá Gualann (Tuam), is not found elsewhere: as much of this as is decipherable is printed in the Addenda to this volume, p. 116, infra.

M has further a kind of appendix in which are mixed up with other matter three poems belonging to the Dindshenchas, on Aenach Uchbad, Ailech III, and Loch Ríach. The first of these does not appear in any other copy of the Dindshenchas: it will be found in the Addenda, p. 115, infra.

The appendix ends with a copy of the poem by Gillananaem Ó Duinn which is printed in Eriu x. 76–89. I have since collated two other copies of this poem: see p. 81, infra.

The scribe of M is abominably careless. Of all texts of the Dindshenchas this has the lowest intrinsic value.

Lc.—The Book of Lecan was written, mainly in the years 1417–8, by three scribes, Gilla Ísu Mac Firbhisigh, Murchadh riabhach Ó Cuindlis, and Adam Ó Cuirnín. The copy of the Dindshenchas is the work partly of Mac Firbhisigh (pp. 461–509), partly of Ó Cuirnín (pp. 510–525). Certain articles which are peculiar to this manuscript—Carn Fraich, Ard na Ríag, Inber Muada, Carn Amalgaid, Mag Tibra, Sliab Gam, Ess Ruaid II (poem only), and Loch Gile—are all concerned with places in or near Co. Sligo, and not far from Lackan on the river Moy, where most of the volume was written. They are somewhat later in point of language than the main body of the Dindshenchas, and it seems probable that they were composed by a native of Sligo, very likely by one of the MacFirbis family. They cannot, however, be ascribed to either of the scribes of Lc., as the text which Lc. presents abounds in corruptions and must therefore be derived from an earlier manuscript. Some local hand may also be detected, perhaps, in the rearrangement of articles 89 to 108 (see p. 42, infra), which cannot easily be accounted for by supposing an accidental disturbance of the order by displacement of the leaves in Lc.'s model. The traditional arrangement may have seemed unsatisfactory to an editor or scribe who was intimately acquainted with this western region.

The manuscript is in excellent preservation and the handwriting of both the scribes of the Dindshenchas is firm and clear, except that in MacFirbis' part it is often difficult to distinguish m, in, and ni. The text is deplorable, being inferior even to that of Lc.'s near relative, S.

Y.—This copy constitutes one of the many disconnected fragments which together make up the (so-called) Yellow Book of Lecan—a title which by right applies only to a small fraction of the whole collection. The copy of the Dindshenchas is imperfect: more than half is wanting. What remains fills 9 folios, now numbered as columns 401–436 (= pp. 438–455 of the photographic facsimile). The script seems to belong to the fifteenth century, but there are no notes to give information as to the date or the scribe's name. It is the work of one hand, excepting the article on Sliab Bladma and the verse (not the prose) of Ceilbe, which are added in a later hand, on two strips of vellum. The text of the Dindshenchas has been corrected throughout by a late hand—perhaps Charles O'Conor, who has similarly maltreated the section of the MS. containing coll. 573–958. His corrections sometimes obliterate the original reading.

Y has lost its first folio and now begins at § 26 of the prose introduction to Temair: see Rev. Celt. xv. 282. The lost leaf probably contained (1) the prose paragraph Senchas Dind Érenn: (2) verse, Temair V: (3) prose, “Temair dono,” ol Amairgen fri Fintan, etc.: (4) verse, Temair I: (5) prose, “Temair dono” ol Armairgen i. mór Tea, etc., = Rev. Celt. xv. 277, § 1–§ 4; (6) verse, Temair II; (7) prose, Dindgnai Temrach: Nemnach, etc., = Rev. Celt. xv. 280, § 5–§ 25. This is the order in SS₂S₃H, which differs from the arrangement in BR (Rev. Celt. xv. 277, seq.) and from that in M (Ériu x. 71–2).

S.—Stowe D. II. 2, vellum, ff. 90 (the number 33 is repeated, so that the subsequent numbers are too low by 1). One leaf has been lost after f. 7, one after f. 33, one after f. 39 [38], and one after f. 44 [43]. The volume is the work of a single scribe, Muiris O Clérig, who gives his name on f. 88 [87] v°. (see part iv. 298). He may be Muiris mac an Ghiolla riabh-aigh ua Cléirigh, saoi hi senchas 7 hi léighionn, who died in 1573 (F.M. v., p. 1674). Otherwise, the date of the manuscript is not easy to determine: the script is calligraphic, ornamented with coloured initials, no doubt imitated from some older exemplar; but the spelling points to the sixteenth or seventeenth century, e.g., bhfuil, caroid (= carait), faighis (= foais), flegh (= fledh), mogh (= mod), ghénamh (= dhén-amh). The volume belonged formerly to Charles O’Conor of Belanagare, who has written some notes in the margins and has made on the last page an entry recording the death of his father, Donnchadh mac Cathail óig, on January 30th, 1750, in his 76th year, and his burial at Ballintubber, and giving his pedigree up to Cathal crob-derg O’Conor. The distinctive feature of this MS. is the series of supplementary articles which are printed (with certain omissions, duly noted) in part iv. 268–310.

S₂.—Stowe B. II. 2, vellum, ff. 8. A fragmentary copy, containing only the beginning of the Dindshenchas: written perhaps in the fourteenth, certainly not later than the fifteenth century. The recto of f. 1 is almost entirely illegible, the verso of f. 8 completely so. Scribe unknown.

S₃.—Stowe B. III. 1, paper, ff. 104. The date is given by a note at foot of f. 89^r: Ag sin a Mheic Con i Dhomnaill na tri líne do iarráis oram do scriobhadh duit. A mBaile Meic Cathail damh occa scriobhadh an 28. Decimbris M.dcl.xii. 1654. This note is in a beautifully neat script, beyond doubt the same as that of the Academy's copy of O'Clery's Leabhar Gabhála, classed 23 K 32, and also of 23 D 17. According to O'Curry (MS. Catalogue, first series, vol. i, p. 84) it is the hand of Cú Coigríche O'Clery, whose autograph will (dated 1664) is contained in 23 D 17, p. 271.

O'Clery wrote about a third of the volume: ff. 2v°, 15r° ad calc. to 18v°, 22v° to 46, 87r° (part) to 89v°, 102v° to 103r° (ds. of Léige); and also added the saints' names in margin of f. 104. The rest of the manuscript is in the hand of a pupil who tries to imitate his master. O'Clery has corrected his work here and there.

E.—Trinity College, Dublin, no. 1436 (E. 4. 1), pp. 85–88, vellum. These are two leaves bound by chance into a medical manuscript. The handwriting and spelling indicate the fourteenth or perhaps the fifteenth century. There are ten articles, both prose and verse: Sliaib Bladma (acephalous), Fid nGáible, Mag Liphe, Berba, Móin Gai Glais, Fafann, Almu II, Alend, Carmun, Bóand II (four st., incomplete). These are in the regular order, except for the inversion of Bóand I and II, which is also found in S. The two leaves are therefore a fragment of a complete copy of the Dindshenchas.

The relation of E to other copies is peculiar. Its most remarkable feature is the inclusion of a long passage in the poem on Carmun, which is also in L, but not in any other member of the Second Recension. At other points also in this poem E agrees with L against all other copies: see critical notes on lines 4, 9, 19, 21–24, 37, 39, 45, 51, 53–56, 58, 59, 68, 84, 85, 90; and compare further the readings at Sl. Bladma, 4, 8, 17–20, and Mag Life, 2.

On the other hand, E has close relations with the 8-group of manuscripts, particularly with S: see VI § 3. As already remarked, E agrees with S in placing Bóand II before Bóand I.

A comparison of the prose versions in E with those of L,

Bd.-Ed., and R (representing the Second Recension) yields the following results :—

Slab Bladma.—The part that remains agrees with Bd.-Ed.

Fid nGable.—Nearest to L, but agrees in one point with Bd.-Ed. against LR, and in two points with R against L Bd.-Ed.

Mag Life.—Nearest to R, but omits R's last paragraph, as do L Bd.-Ed.

Berba.—Nearest to R, with omission of one line, omitted also by L Bd.-Ed.

Moin Gáil Glais, Faffann, Almu II, Alend.—Agrees with R. Of these, only Almu II is in L, none in Bd.-Ed.

Carmun.—Agrees with R, except at end, where E has three lines which are in L but not in R (following in Herinn foraib); E also agrees with L in adding da feraib after mochléithe, and Étgud écruthach 7 maile after ríg ócca.

H.—Trin. Coll. H. 3, 3 (1322), ff. 72, vellum. Written mainly by Seán Ó Cianáin, at Ard Choill: see note at f. 14by: Misi Sean O Cianain dosgriobh in dara la ria Notlaic, et is olc lium a thinnius ar medugud ag Sean O Maolchonaire, San Ard Coill damh. There are similar notes at 5az, 17az, 29bz, 36bz, 37bz, 38bz. The illness of Sean O Maolehonaire is mentioned again at 60bz. O'Donovan in his (incomplete and unpublished) description of the Trinity College MSS. says that this O Muleonry “kept a celebrated school at Ardkyle, near Sixmilebridge in Co. Clare, in the reign of Elizabeth.” Seán Ó Cianáin also wrote Rawlinson B. 506, see ZCP xii. 358. At 30bz there is a note Misi Tadg O Cienain, presumably by a brother or kinsman of Seán Ó Cianáin, and this man may have written part of the MS.; but, if so, his hand is scarcely distinguishable from that of Seán.

Other scribal notes mention the names Cú Chonnacht (46bz), Corbmac (58az), Seán Mac Connara (53aw), Domnall Mac Connara (58bz), Tadg O Duuthach, i.e. O Dubhthaigh (10bz).

This is the “vellum written about the year 1560 for John O'Mulconry” mentioned by O'Donovan in the Ordnance Survey of Co. Londonderry, p. 223, which Stokes (Rev. Celt. xv. 274, note) supposed to be separate MS. Stokes wrongly ascribed H to the fifteenth century.

The scribe has certain peculiarities of spelling, which must be taken into account in judging of variant readings.

He frequently writes e for a, as in ier, dieta, for iar, diatá, etc.; o for a, as in catho, athor, luon; oa, oai, for ua, uai, as toath, toarith; -aois for -is (final), as gondaois = gontis = earlier gontais; c for g, as arcot = argat; cc(h) for g(h), as ceilcc = ceilg; p for b, as pa = ba; p, ph, or u for b(h), as curuut = corbat, feruip = feraib, diph = dib; q for cu as qan = cuan; occasionally mb for m, as ainmb = ainm; ld for ll, as Maolsecnailld.

He is much given to adding otiose vowels after a final vowel, -ai for -a, -ou for -o, etc.: even writing imnnaireau for imnáire. He often adds an otiose u, both medial and final, writing gaurb for garb, cavire for coire; one finds such lines as la firu Boule bautar and for mauco for ingenau, a relicc nau rauth-Feniu. When a quatrain ends in the middle of a line of the manuscript he will often fill up the blank by repeating the last letter perhaps a dozen times.

S₄. The vellum codex Stowe D. IV. 2 contains, on f. 55 v° and f. 56 r° and v°, seven articles from the Dindshenchas, viz.: f. 55, Lusmag (prose and verse), Dún mac Nechtain (prose); here at least one folio is missing; f. 56, Ath Luain (verse, acephalous), Mag Léna I (pr. and v.), Loch Derg (pr. and v.), Slíab Mairge II (pr. and v.), Crechmael (pr. and v.). The last of these is in a different hand from the rest: the scribe appends a note at foot of f. 56 v°: I Mainistir Chilli Cormaic dam. Misi Seaan mac Aedacain qui scribisit. Cell Chormaie (Kilcormick) in Uí Failge is otherwise known as Frankfort in King's County. The scribe belonged to the well-known family of Mae Egans, as to whom see the Introduction to the facsimile of Leabhar Breac, the index to Abbott-Gwynn, Catalogue of Irish MSS. in Trinity College, Dublin, and O'Donovan, Tribes and Customs of Hy Many, p. 168.

The contents of D. IV. 2 are partially described by Meyer (Rev. Celt. VI. 173, seq.). He refers the manuscript to the late fourteenth century, but it more probably belongs to the fifteenth century.¹

The articles seem to be selected quite arbitrarily, as they do not follow the order observed in any copy of the Dindshenchas.

The text is nearest to that of B: see critical apparatus to Crechmael, 4, 9, 10, 19 (pt. iv. 22); Loch Derg, 18, 23, 41, 48, 50, 56, 67, 72, 87, 93, 100, 103 (pt. iii. 338, seq.).

II.—FIRST RECENSION: (a) The Dindshenchas in the Book of Leinster.

§ 1. In the present arrangement of the manuscript, which is followed in the published facsimile, the Dindshenchas occupies pp. 151–170 and 191–216; between pp. 170 and 191 twenty pages of other matter are interpolated. It cannot, however, be assumed that this was the original order. The book, as a whole, had suffered severely before it came into the hands of Edward Lhuyd, in or about the year 1700. Much of its original contents was missing, many leaves were crumpled, many were detached from their conjugates, some were partially obliterated. Loose leaves had, no doubt, been displaced from their proper positions, and attempts to restore the original order were not wholly successful. We must allow for the possibility that not only single leaves, but whole gatherings, may have lost their right place. The ten folios (pp. 171–190) which interrupt the sequence of the Dindshenchas form a continuous and self-contained section of the MS. They are not connected by contexture of leaves with what precedes or with what follows, and may have been transferred bodily by some rearranger to their present position. It seems more likely that such a displacement occurred than that the scribe turned from his work on the Dindshenchas to write these leaves and then returned to the Dindshenchas.

¹ In the introduction to his edition of Merugud Uilix Meyer dates the codex 1300 A.D., relying on an entry on fo. 1. But the figures “MCCC” are not, as he asserts, part of the Latin note in the hand of the text: they are entered separately in a different and, apparently, a later hand, and may safely be ignored.

Further, it has long been recognised that the order of the Dindshenchas itself is wrong at two points. The first half of the poem on Brug na Bóinde is on p. 164, the latter half on p. 211; and the poem on Berba, which begins on p. 216, is completed on p. 191. A closer study of the contexture of leaves, and of the script, will bring out some other points deserving of consideration.

Pp. 151–154 are conjugates of 143–146; their position is therefore secure.

Pp. 155–158 (two detached leaves) follow these without break of continuity between page and page. P. 158 ends with a blank space. So far all is in verse.

Pp. 159–160 begin the prose. This leaf is conjugate with 165–166, but 165 begins with an acephalous article, so that we must mark a gap between 160 and 165.

(Pp. 161–164 are out of order: see below.)

P. 167 continues 166; 167–168 is a detached leaf and 168 ends with a completed article, so that there may possibly be a gap between this leaf and the next, but I see no reason to assume that such a gap exists.

Pp. 169–170, another detached leaf (here follow the ten interpolated leaves, pp. 171–190).

Pp. 215–216, a loose leaf, must, as we have seen, be placed before 191. As 215 begins in the middle of a prose article (Carmun),^{1a} we must mark another gap before this leaf.

Pp. 191–202 consist of three pairs of conjugates (191–2 = 201–2, 193–4 = 199–200, 195–6 = 197–8).

Pp. 203–6, two detached leaves.

^{1a} The article begins with the paragraph Sengarman tanic i ndegaid and above it is written vel ita. In MSS. of the Second Recension this paragraph is preceded by four others (as in Rev. Celt. xv. 311) founded on ll. 17–76 of the poem on Carmun, and vel ita is written over par. 5, as in L. I assume that a leaf is lost before p. 215 which contained these paragraphs. Thurneysen (Heldensage) does not admit the loss of a leaf here. If he is right, we must suppose that paragraphs 1–4 of the Second Recension were added by the Reviser, and must explain the vel ita as intended by the scribe to distinguish the prose from the metrical version which follows. This seems unlikely, yet we have a somewhat similar case at p. 193a where the dindshenchas of Fornocht is given both in prose and in verse, and over the prose is written vel aliter, though the prose precedes the verse.

Pp. 207-8 are conjugate with 211-2.

Pp. 209-10, a loose leaf, ending with a blank space.

From 215 to the end of 210 there is no break of connexion between page and page.

Pp. 161-4 form two detached leaves, but their contents are continuous, and we have seen that 164 must immediately precede 211: these four pages must therefore be placed between 210 and 211.

Pp. 213-4, a loose leaf, but 213 continues 212. The Dindshenchas ends with 214.

Thus we arrive at the following order:—

I. 151-158. All verse.

II. 159-160, —, 165-170. All prose except for the poems on Lagin, and a few scattered stanzas: see p. 16, below.

III. —, 215-6, 191-210, — (?), 161-4, 211-214. Mainly verse, with a few prose articles: see pp. 17-19, below. This section includes several poems, especially on pp. 205-8, which do not properly belong to the Dindshenchas.

It is possible that II and III originally stood in reverse order, the metrical part being completed (except for Lagin) before the prose was begun. There is nothing in the contexture of the leaves to disprove this supposition.

§ 2. The handwriting offers two points of interest.

(I). The script of pp. 161-4 is remarkably fine and careful: the letters a and d are particularly noticeable, and the sharp angles are finished with more care than in any other part of the Dindshenchas. There are scarcely any other leaves in the whole manuscript which equal these two in penmanship; accordingly one of these leaves was chosen for photographic reproduction in the facsimile, where it gives a somewhat too flattering impression of the volume as a whole. Also the vellum seems to me to be somewhat smoother and finer than that employed for the rest of the Dindshenchas. When one compares these two leaves with what precedes and follows, one is at first disposed to think that they are the work of a different scribe; but a careful examination of the lower part of 161a, where the lines are crowded and the hand deteriorates, has convinced me that these pages are the work of the same scribe ("A") who wrote the rest of the Dindshenchas, both prose and verse, with the exception of the columns which I have next to mention.

(2). The second column of 208, with all that follows in the present order of pagination down to the end of 214, is in a hand ("B") markedly inferior to that of the main scribe, even when his work is most hurried and crowded. This hand is shaky and uneven, and offers a striking contrast to the beautiful clearness and regularity of the script in 161-4. The difference between the columns written in this hand and those that precede cannot be attributed to any roughness of the vellum. The contrast between the fine penmanship of the first half of the poem on Brug na Bóinde on 164 and the conclusion in B's hand on 211 is particularly striking.

I believe that A broke off at the end of the first column of 208, and that B continued the task of transcription to the end of 210. At this point A inserted the two leaves 161-164, which he had for some reason written with more care and probably at a different time from the rest. B then resumed work on the pair of vellum sheets which he had been using, completing a poem left unfinished by A on p. 164, and carrying on to the end of the verse Dindshenchas. If the prose originally followed the verse, as has been suggested above, A must have relieved B after p. 214.²

§ 3. We have now to see what further light can be obtained from an examination of the contents of the various sections into which the L-Dindshenchas falls. We shall have to distinguish, not as at first three sections, but five or perhaps six. I proceed to list the whole contents of the L-Dindshenchas, verse and prose, noting the province to which each place belongs. Many of them have not yet been identified, but we may in uncertain cases be guided by the position they occupy in the Second Recension, which is arranged, as we shall see, though imperfectly, in geographical order. We have also evidence as to the provinces to which unidentified places belong in O'Duinn's poem (see p. 77, below). But O'Duinn is by no means a reliable guide: he is certainly mistaken in placing Mag Muiresce (62) in Meath and Benn Boguine (40) in Connaught.

Loch Derg and Ath Luain are here treated as belonging to Connaught, because they are so regarded in the Second Recension.

§ 4. It is evident that there is no continuous geographical arrangement throughout the series as a whole. But it is also clear that there are signs of attempts at such an arrangement. Thus in I, 5 places in Munster (7-11) are followed by 8 in Connaught (12-19). In this section there are altogether 9 Connaught names, 5 from Munster and 2 from each of the other provinces. In III (a) (omitting the prose of II for the moment) Leinster predominates. The beginning of this section is lost: possibly it contained a Meath series. As it stands, it begins with 35 places, of which 3 are doubtful (89, 101-2), and the rest (counting Bóand: the river rises in Kildare) are in Leinster. Of the next 8 places (122-129), 7 are in Munster, 1 in Leinster (124); then come 6 scattered places; then come 5 in Leinster, then 8 scattered over the five provinces. Here the scribe interposes a number of poems which do not belong to the Dindshenchas, and then adds 3 places which seem to close a section of the work. In this section there are 42 places from Leinster, 11 from Munster, 4 from Connaught, 3 from Meath, 2 from Ulster, and 5 are uncertain.

In Section III (b) (pp. 161-4) there is no trace of geographical order, but when we pass to III (c) we find a marked preponderance of Connaught names; 11 out of 16 belong to that province, not counting Loch Erne and Ess Ruaid, which are on the confines of Connaught and Ulster.

§ 5. The facts stated above (§ 4) seem to indicate that the verse-Dindshenchas in L is derived from several separate documents, among which one (IIIa) was mainly concerned with Leinster, and another (IIIc) mainly with Connaught. If the whole collection had been made by a compiler who intended to put together the Dindshenchas of all Ireland, without having any previous partial attempts to work upon, he would hardly have begun in the abrupt and random fashion in which the scribe of L attacks his task. There has been a process of accretion comparable to that by which Irish dictionaries have been formed. One compiler found and put together glossaries of separate texts some of which followed the order in which excerpts were made, others the order of the letters of the alphabet; then a later compiler, like O'Davoren or O'Clery, attempted to digest the whole on the alphabetical plan; the final result being a mixture of system and haphazard. It can hardly have been the scribe of L who thus formed the Dindshenchas Érenn from smaller units. At first sight one is tempted to give him the credit and to suppose that the blanks which he has left at the foot of p. 158 and p. 210 mark the end of two of the documents which he was utilising. But this supposition cannot well be reconciled with the conclusions arrived at below (p. 67) as to the relations between the Reviser's model and the text of L. It will there be shown that the Reviser had before him a text in many points different from and superior to L: he cannot have worked directly from L. If the scribe of L collected for the first time five or six different documents, we should have to suppose that the Reviser had access to all of these and made (on the whole) better use of them. This is a very improbable supposition. We must then assume that there existed a collection prior to L, from which L and the revised text of the Second Recension are independently derived. There is definite proof of this. In the poem on Inber Ailbne there is a hiatus of four lines (the latter half of one stanza and the first half of the next) which is common to L and to the whole Second Recension. It was therefore already in the MS. to which both the scribe of L and the Reviser had access.

As to the blanks in L noted above, the poem on Maistiu, which is the last entry on p. 158, is unfinished, and the blank which follows may, as Thurneysen suggests, have been left by the scribe with the intention of completing the poem from another copy. The blank at the foot of p. 210b remains unexplained; but it may be noted that at other points the scribe left blanks for no apparent reason. On p. 163 there was a vacant space after the poem on Dún Másc, which was filled by a later hand with the paragraphs on Duma Oena and other places. So too at the foot of p. 201b the entry about Cnoc Rafann is a later addition on a space originally left blank. There is also a smaller vacant space at the foot of p. 168a.

§ 6. We have now to consider the prose section. Like the verse it shows a half-hearted attempt at a geographical arrangement. Beginning with Temair—a choice which suggests that the compiler had in view a collection representative of all Ireland—it proceeds with a series of 13 places in Leinster. Then after a gap in the manuscript we have 5 places in Connaught (35–39), and from 53–63 another series of 11 Connaught names (but 60 is a doubtful case). From 65–78, all are in Munster, with the probable exceptions of 69 and 76.

It can hardly be doubted that the prose Dindshenchas has been put together largely by making abstracts of the corresponding poems. Some of the poems appear from their language to be older than the prose (e.g., those on Áth Liac Find, Ailech I, Lumman Tige Srafáin, Benn Étair I). Some are ascribed to authors of the early eleventh or even of the tenth century (e.g., Achall, to Cinaeth ua Hartacáin, †974), and we have no reason to put the composition of the prose so early. In several cases the prose compiler quotes the first line or detached stanzas of a poem which belongs to the verse Dindshenches, and which is evidently his source: the instances are Loch Garman, Sliab Bladma, Mag Raigne (all on p. 159), Dún Másc, and Faffann (p. 160), Nemthenn (p. 165), Echtga (p. 170), besides Ráth Chnámrossa and Cend Finichair (p. 200), which are included in one of the verse-sections. Also the prose of Loch Riach ends with reference to a (lost) poem beginning Rochuala cocad n-omra. We may add two cases where the prose refers to a poem which no longer exists in L, but is found in the Second Recension: these are Fích Buana (p. 166) and Findglais (p. 169). In these instances, however, the prose-writer seems to draw directly from the well-known tales Fled Bricrenn and Aided Chonroi rather than from the poems which he mentions. Speaking generally, when we have both the prose and the verse legends of any place in L for comparison, we find that the prose is usually no more than a brief extract from the poem, while in most cases the poem contains much that is not to be found in the prose. It is true that the prose often gives names and incidents not derived from the verse: such additions are no doubt drawn from the compiler's own knowledge of the common stock of legendary lore.

§ 7. There are 64^{2a} poems in the verse of the L-Dindshenches for which there is no prose equivalent, and there are 30 proses for which there is no corresponding poem. As both prose and verse are defective, owing to losses of folios, we may presume that many of the missing equivalents would be supplied if the manuscript were still complete. But it would be a mistake to assume that the original collection possessed both verse and prose for every place on the list. Comparison with the Second Recension shows that 25 out of the 30 proses just mentioned are there provided with metrical versions. Most of these, however, as Thurneysen rightly insists, are clearly later work, and are probably due to the Reviser. The relation between these poems and the prose is the converse of that which we find in L. For the most part they are evidently based on the prose, adding no more to its data than some metrical padding. We must infer that the Reviser in these cases found no poem in the older recension and himself supplied a metrical version.³ The poems in the original Second Recension (ending with Bile Tortan, no. 167 of the list on p. 48, below) which are not also found in L are 61 in number. For many of these no equivalent exists in L's prose in its present state. But if we assume that the early prose Dindshenchas, when complete, included those legends which are found in the Bd.-Ed. recension, though no longer in L, then we have prose equivalents for all but 13 of these 61 poems. The 13 which remain unaccounted for are: Temair III, Brug na Bóinde I, Inber nAilbne, Dún Crim-thainn, Temair Luachra, Mag nÁi, Duma Selga, Áth nGrencha, Carraic Lethdeirg, Lecht Oenfhir Aife, Loch Dá Gabar, Mag Léna, and Bile Tortan: and in the first two instances, L has a different poem on the same subject.

§ 8. As already stated, L has 64 poems without an equivalent in its prose.⁴

For 13 of these prose versions are supplied by the Bd.-Ed. recension: these proses therefore (or most of them) probably existed also in L in its complete condition. For most of the remaining 51 poems the Reviser supplied a prose version, just as he supplied metrical versions where these were lacking in L; or else he adapted versions then existing in the First Recension, but now lost.

³ The four proses which want a verse equivalent in L, and were omitted by the Reviser in the original draft of the Second Recension, are Sráb Bó, Mag Tarbga, Séig Mossad, Loch nOirbsen.

The case of Ceilbe is peculiar. The prose in L is introduced by the words ut ante, uel aliter, as if the scribe had already copied an entry about this place. Was this a poem, which stood in the leaf that has been lost before p. 215? If so, it was omitted by the Reviser, who only copied the prose legend. In two late MSS. it was fitted with a poem by an author of the sixteenth century.

In two more instances places which have both verse and prose legends in L are omitted from all MSS. of the Second Recension. These are Cenn Finichair and Lumman Tige Srafáin.

⁴ Note that some of the proses accompany the poems (see list on pp. 17-19). In no case are these repeated in L's prose-collection (Thurneysen's "Ba").

Some of the L-poems were, however, passed over by the Reviser. Thurneysen supposes that these did not belong to the original Dindshenchas, but were added by the scribe of L (Heldensage, 38-9 and 43). It seems, however, quite as likely that the Reviser excluded them, at least in some cases, because they did not conform to his stricter conception of the term dindshenchas.

On the same ground a number of poems are omitted from the present edition which the scribe of L has inserted among the true Dindshenchas poems. Most of these occur between p. 204 and p. 208 of L. Thurneysen treats them as part of the collection, but they cannot be brought within any definition of the term dindshenchas, however loosely interpreted. I regret, however, that the poem on the legend of Bóand (pp. 208-9) has also been omitted. It ought to have been included in my second volume, after Bóand II.

III. FIRST RECENSION: (b) BD.-ED.

§ 1. Two MSS., Rawl. B. 506 ("Bd.") and Kilbride XVI ("Ed.") contain a recension of the prose Dindshenchas, differing both from that of L and from the Second Recension in contents, in arrangement, and in text. Both are fragmentary; they supplement each others' deficiencies to a considerable extent, but the full list of the original contents remains a matter of conjecture. The contents of Bd. and those articles in Ed. which are not found in Bd. have been edited by Stokes, Folk-Lore, III (1892), pp. 467 seq., and IV (1893), pp. 471 seq.⁵ A description of the state of both manuscripts, with conjectures as to their original contents, will be found in Stokes, ut sup., and in Thurneysen's Heldensage, pp. 39-43. In an article contributed to Ériu X, 68-74, it has been shown that in the Dindshenchas in the Book of Uí Maine (M) there are interpolated some 20 articles, the text of which approximates to that of Bd.-Ed. For purposes of comparison with the other recensions I append a table of the present contents of both manuscripts, and show the correspondences with the M-interpolation, with L (prose and verse), and with the Second Recension.

⁵ He gave the classing of Ed. wrongly as "Kilbride XVI," a mistake which is repeated in the present edition, pt. iii. p. viii, pt. iv. p. ix.

It will be seen that the surviving part which is common to Bd. and Ed. is arranged in both in the same order, except that Tuag Inbir is placed in Bd. before Cleitech, in Ed. before Benn Boguine. Further, the text of the two manuscripts agrees so closely that it is clear that we have to do with two fragmentary copies of one document. This assumption is confirmed by the fact that the M-interpolation has six items which are in Bd. but missing in Ed., and seven which are in Ed. but missing from Bd.

When the Bd.-Ed. text is compared with the prose of L and of the Second Recension, in the articles which are common to all three, it is found as a rule to be much closer to the former than to the latter. In fact, in a large proportion of cases Bd.-Ed. and L are practically identical, apart from minor additions and omissions: whereas Rev. is usually differentiated by adding (or less frequently, by omitting) aliter versions of the legend, or by retelling in different words the versions which it has in common with L and Bd.-Ed. On the other hand there are many instances of agreement between Bd.-Ed. and Rev. against L. In an article contributed to Hermathena (1932) I studied the relations of the text common to Bd., Ed., and the M-interpolation with the prose of L on the one hand and with that of Rev. on the other. The conclusions reached were—

(i) that Bd.-Ed.-M derive from a text (β) which was itself not a complete copy of the Dindshenchas, but a selection based on a manuscript of the First Recension (α), other than L;

(ii) that β , although an off-shoot of the First Recension, represents a later stage of the tradition than L, containing certain additions and developments, some of which were probably already present in α ;

(iii) that the Reviser's work was based on α , though he used it rather as a quarry for material than as a model.

(Note that the symbol β was in the Hermathena article employed otherwise than in the present volume, in which it is used to denote the common ancestor of B and R.)

IV.—SECOND RECENSION.

§ 1. The compiler of the Second Recension had a stricter notion of the meaning of the term dindshenchas than the first compiler, and his work is throughout more systematic. He brings together the prose and metrical versions of each legend, usually separated in the older arrangement, always putting the prose first, and introducing it with the unvarying formula : ‘X unde nominatur? ní insa.’ Poems which did not conform to his definition he seems to have omitted on principle, and this is no doubt the reason of the exclusion of several legends included in the First Recension. When either a prose or a metrical version was wanting, he seems to have supplied the deficiency from his own resources (see II, §§ 7, 8). Further, it is clear that he intended from the first to follow a geographical arrangement (and it may be noted that the additions made in later copies of the Second Recension follow the same principle, with few exceptions). When he found clear traces of an attempt at geographical sequence in the verse of the earlier recension he has preserved its order, as the following examples will show.

Thus the Reviser has preserved all the longer sequences in the older verse recension,⁶ interpolating, however, a few places according to his own ideas of geographieal fitness.

This principle has determined the arrangement of the first 114 numbers of the first draft (BR), which are distributed according to provinces as follows. First come 7 places in Meath, then 32 (counting Bóand) in Leinster. Next we have 20 places (nos. 44–64), all in Munster, except 48 (Mag Raigne) and 55 (Cenn Currig), which are in Leinster, and 60 (Srúb Brain), as to which see Heldensage, p. 492. Then come 31 places (nos. 65–95) in Connaught. After these no. 96 (Druim Criach in Meath) is inserted, out of geographical order. Then 16 places (nos. 97–113) mostly in Ulster, but 100 (Ath nGrencha) is probably in Meath and one or two more are doubtful. Here the compiler's procedure becomes more difficult to follow. As to the 32 places, nos. 114 to 145 (at which point the Second Recension seems originally to have ended) it is to be remarked, first, that only one (114) occurs in L; secondly, that most of the places, so far as they have been identified, seem to belong to Meath, but that there is an admixture of names from all the other provinces. We may assign to Meath with more or less certainty the following: Tailtiu, Odba, Loch Dá Gabar, Benn Chodail (?), Tlachtga, Mag Breg, Cleitech, Cerna, Irarus, Mag Findabradh, Gáirech, Tráig Tuirbe, Brí Léith, Tethba, Loch nAindind, Druim Suamaig, Dún Mac Nechtain (?), Bile Tortan: in all, 18 places. To Ulster belong perhaps 6 places, Slab Fuait, Slab Callann, Inber Cíchmaine (?), Fích Buana (?), Lia Ling-dain (?), Inber Bicne, of which only 3 are certain. To Connaught we may assign at most 3 places, Móin Tíre Náir, Odras, Cloenloch. Only three, Sruthar Matha, Luibnech and Loch Séta, probably belong to Munster, and two, Lusmag (?) and Mag Léna, to Leinster.

There is thus a marked predominance of Meath names. Why did the Reviser thus turn back to his starting point? A reason suggests itself when we refer to what is said (II § 7) of the sources of his compilation. It is there assumed that for the most part he either (a) took the poems which he found in the older recension, or (b) composed fresh poems by versifying the prose of the older recension, when this contained no corresponding poem. But he made little use of the second method until he had advanced some way in his task. Out of the first 91 places celebrated in the Second Recension, in its original form and omitting later additions (and also omitting Ceilbe, which had at first no metrical version), there are only 12 not represented in the verse of L, namely, Inber Ailbne, Dún Crimthainn, Mag Mugna, Loch Dachaech, Tonn Chlidna, Crotta Cliach, Temair Luachra, Findglais, Moenmag, Mag nÁi, Duma Selga, and Loch Con.⁷

⁷ And some of these probably had their places in the folios which I assume to be lost before p. 215 of L. On the other hand, the poem on Almu in the Second Recension is quite different from that in L, and the Second Recension adds alternative poems on several places besides those in L.

It is only after No. 98 (Benn Boguine) that the Reviser begins to add numerous poems versifying L's prose legends or drawing from his own resources. These are at first concerned with places in Ulster, which province is, as we have seen, poorly represented in L. Afterwards (from 117 onward) he seems to have turned back to the remaining prose legends for which the earlier recension had no verse equivalent, and to have given them a metrical form. The greater number of these were, as has been remarked, attached to places in the province of Meath.

§ 2. The table which follows shows the contents of all MSS. belonging to the Second Recension, with the exception of such as are mere copies of other extant MSS., and also of V and X, which are late and valueless. MSS. which contain short excerpts from the Dindshenchas, without regard to order, are not included (see p. 4). The columns are spaced so as to show correspondences and differences of arrangement. The numbering in the first column relates to the complete list: that in the second column is confined to the original contents of BR, which I regard as the first form of this Recension.

V. GROUPING OF MSS. OF THE SECOND RECENSION:

(a) Arrangement.

A study of this table at once suggests certain inferences.

§ 1. All these manuscripts belong to one recension, arranged in a sequence which in the course of time has undergone certain disturbances.

§ 2. By the test of arrangement alone certain groups of manuscripts may be distinguished.

BR.—These two had originally almost exactly the same contents. But there now exists in B a hiatus between pp. 406 and 407 of the published facsimile, covering numbers 143 (end), 144, 147, 148, 149, and part of 150. All these numbers are found in their proper place in the two late copies of B, here called B_2 and H_2 , but they have not 145 (a late addition to the collection) nor 146 (Odras), though this is found in R Lc M Y S S₃ H. Odras must therefore have been missing from B. R has a hiatus comprising the end of 98, 99, 101, 102, and the beginning of 104; 100 and 103 are later additions.

Here follow the supplementary articles, printed part iv, 268–
310.

In these two cases the chasm is due to the loss of a leaf or leaves of the manuscripts. There is another wide gap in the series in R, between 110 and 119. This is not due to the loss of a leaf of R, as 110 is followed on the same page by 119. The solution of continuity must therefore be due to the loss of two or three folios from R's model (ρ), intermediate between R and the common ancestor of B R (β).

The last three poems in B are 162 (Druim Suamaig I), 163 (Dún Mac Nechtain), and 167 (Bile Tortan). In R, the verso of the last folio, numbered 125 v°, which is mainly but not wholly illegible, consists of two columns. The first, written in a small hand different from that of the rest of the R-Dindshenchas, contains the end of Druim Suamaig I, Druim Suamaig II (not in B), Dún Mac Nechtain, and finally the prose and first 9 stanzas of Tuag Inbir (113). The top of the second column was formerly written on, but the writing has been carefully erased, and a blank is left. The lower part of the column is occupied by some entries of recent date. Apparently this last page, 125 v°, either once contained or was intended to contain the three final articles as in B. A later scribe, desiring to make room for the second poem on Druim Suamaig (which he found in some other source) and also for the whole article on Tuag Inbir (which is one of those omitted in R in the long gap after 110), must have scraped the whole page and set to work to rewrite it in a small script. But for some reason or other he never completed the last column, which should contain the end of Tuag Inbir and the article on Bile Tortan.

It will be seen that B R differ from the rest both at the beginning and at the end. All the rest (so far as they are not defective) begin with Temair V, which is not found in B R. At the end they have the differences and additions shown in the list. Y has lost both beginning and end, but it probably agreed with Le S (see § 4). S₂ being only a short fragment its arrangement is uncertain.

§ 3. (a) Le S S₃ H agree (i) in having 70 (Sinann II), 73 (Medraige), and 87 (Loch Cê), which are not found in B R M, and (ii) in presenting a conflate version of 132 (Sliab Fuait), made up of seven stanzas from the long poem Sliab Fuait I, which L alone has in its entirety, combined with the four stanzas which form the version peculiar to B R M.

(b) Y S S₃ H agree in giving 26 (Bóand II) and 28 (Cnogba), which are not in B R M. It may safely be assumed that Le and Y, when complete, agreed in all these points with S S₃ H, against B R M.

§ 4. Comparison of the texts (see VI. § 4) shows that Le Y S form a closely related sub-group. Their similarity in point of order is partly obscured by the loss of the beginning of Le and of the beginning and end of Y.

(a) Y S both place Bóand I after Bóand II (which follows Carmun) and Cnogba after Nás: whereas in S₃ H Bóand I and II are placed earlier in the series, and Cnogba comes near the end.

(b) Le S have the two poems on Sinann (69, 70) in reverse order.

(c) Le S both have Mag Léna II (145): it is not found in any other copy of the Dindshenchas, though it occurs in two MSS. not belonging to the collection.

(d) Le S have at the end six articles, 170–174 and 176, which do not exist in any other manuscript of the Second Recension.

We may probably assume that Le originally contained Bóand II and Cnogba, placed as in Y S; and that Y agreed with Le S as to Mag Léna II, and also as to the six articles mentioned in (d).

The immediate ancestor of the group Le Y S will be known as ϵ .

§ 5. (a) S_s H both place Mide (12) after Duma nEirc (6), and introduce Bóand II much earlier in the series than do Y S.

(b) They both place 27, 29–34, in the same order as in B R M, after Slige Dala (68), while they put Cnogba (28) much later: in S_s it stands after Mag Léna I (144), in H after Fich Buana (138).

(c) Four poems, Tailtiu (131), Odba (135), Inber Cíchmaine (136), Loch Dá Gabar (139), which in B R M Le S occur late in order, are in S_s H brought back near the beginning; in S_s they are nos. 18–21, in H, nos. 15, 16, 17, 19.

(d) S_s H agree against all other copies as to the order of the last six poems. The recto of the last folio of H is almost entirely illegible, but it is still possible to recognise fragments of Lége, Odras, and Éo Rossa; while on the verso, otherwise completely obliterated, the initial “B” of Bile Tortan is just distinguishable.

(e) S_s H have a fuller version of Sruthar Matha (134) in 11 stanzas: all other copies have only 4 stanzas.

(f) They both have the poem on Ceilbe (29), which is only found elsewhere on a slip of parchment inserted in Y.

These facts make it necessary to recognise a common ancestor of S_s and H, which we shall call ζ , although both have individual peculiarities (see b, c, above). How are we to account for the dislocations of the earlier order which must have existed in ζ ? As to the first case (b), the obvious answer is that the leaves of ζ containing 27–34 had fallen out of order. These articles would just about fill two folios of the size of the Book of Ballymote. In regard to (c) however this line of explanation involves difficulties. For if we suppose the four articles Tailtiu, Odba, Inber Cíchmaine, and Loch Dá Gabar (which fill about $3\frac{3}{4}$ columns of B) to have been displaced owing to more leaves of ζ falling out of order, how shall we account for the intrusion of Dún Crimthainn in H between Inber Cíchmaine and Loch Dá Gabar? We shall also have to account for the fact that 132–4 and 137–8 have not suffered displacement in either S₂ or H, but occur in the same relative position as in other copies. It is more likely that the scribe of ζ deliberately corrected the earlier order, as we find it in B R M Lc S. And in fact it needed correction at this point, for the geographical sequence had been badly neglected. From 129 (Benn Boirche, in Co. Down) we suddenly pass to Tailtiu (Teltown, on the Boyne) and return to Sliab Fuait (132), on the borders of Down and Armagh. Next with 133 (Sliab Callann) we are in Co. Derry, and then with 135 (Odba), back in Meath: 136 (Inber Cíchmaine) is somewhere in Ulster; 137 (Móin Tire Nair) seems to be on the upper Shannon; 138 (Fich Buana) must be between Armagh and the lower Erne; and with 139 (Loch Dá Gabar) we are once more in Meath. The scribe of ζ apparently endeavoured to cure this disorder by removing the legends of places in Meath to the earlier part of the series, which is occupied with this province. If this was his intention, it was carried further by the scribe of H: for he has similarly removed 9 further articles after Loch Dá Gabar (140–144, 147, 148, 150, 151). They are all, so far as they are identified, places in Meath or Westmeath, but the positions of Inber Cíchmaine (136), Lusmag (140), and Benn Chodail (141) are doubtful. Thus H begins with a series of articles on 22 places, 18 of which are in the province of Meath. This explanation, however, fails to account for the scribe's placing Dún Crimthainn (in Co. Dublin) and Inber Cíchmaine (probably in Ulster) in this series: it is also not obvious why Cnogba (Knowth in Co. Meath) has not been transferred with the rest of the group.

§ 6. We may summarise the results of this study of the arrangement in the different MSS. (i) The earliest form of the Second Recension is represented by B R. Its contents were those of B before the loss of a folio after p. 406 of the facsimile. There is a doubt as to one article, Odras (146), which seems never to have had a place in B, although it is found not only in R but also in Le Y S S₃ H. If it had stood in the common ancestor of B R (β) the scribe of B could hardly have omitted it entirely per incuriam. Possibly it was an early addition to β : if so, it was common to R's immediate model (ρ) and to the common ancestor of Le Y M S S₃ H (γ), which must have been in existence before the year 1394 (date of M). The late position of Odras in γ is in favour of this supposition: the scribe of R must then have transferred it to what he considered to be its proper place, presumably for geographical reasons.

Excluding Odras, β contained 145 articles, and ended with Bile Tortan.

(ii) In γ Temair V was added at the beginning of the series and Lége at the end. It is not likely that γ was a descendant of β .

(iii) The common ancestor of Le Y S S₃ H may be called δ . In it were added three new articles—Cnogba, Medraige, Loch Cé—and second poems on Bóand and Sinann. None of these five items is found in M. Also a longer conflate version of Sliab Fuait was substituted for the three stanzas in B R, and Bóand was now placed after Carmun.

δ was at least as old as the early fifteenth century (date of Le).

(iv) The common ancestor of Le Y S (ϵ) added Mag Léna II and six articles at the end: see § 4 (d). I hesitate to assign Loch Riach to ϵ , as it occurs in S in the supplement at the end, which seems to have no connection with Le or S.

ϵ was earlier than Le, therefore not later than the early fifteenth century. It will be shown (p. 65) that an intermediate link (λ) must be postulated between Le and ϵ .

(v) The common ancestor of S₃ H (ζ) added a poem to the prose of Ceilbe, and gave a fuller version of Sruthar Matha. ζ was later than the composition of the Ceilbe poem, which is attributed to Páidín Ó Maolchonaire, who died in 1543.

These relationships may be represented graphically.

VI. GROUPING OF MSS. OF THE SECOND RECENSION:

(b) Texts.

We have next to consider how far the conclusions arrived at in the last section are confirmed or modified by a study of the texts of the different manuscripts. I propose to examine successively the separate groups suggested by the foregoing analysis, quoting a certain number of readings in support of my conclusions. The full evidence which might be given under each head would occupy too much space.

§ 1.—B R. These are certainly the most important authorities for the fundamental text of the Second Recension, and in dealing with poems not found in L I have generally followed them, when they are in agreement, in preference to the remaining copies.

I select (a) examples where B R agree against all other copies, (b) those in which either B or R stands alone. I place first the reading of B R, or of B or R singly, then those of the remaining authorities.

Part i, p. 14 (Temair III):

(a) B R stand alone: 13, Is sin: Is i in; 16, a hairdri: a hairri, etc.; 25, fosgeib: nosgeib; 39, concereca: concerta, etc.; 44, n-aenmís: a n-oendís, nainfis, etc.; 84, aterno: asterna; 106, Tead: Tea.

Agreement of B R M. It may be added here that in this poem, as in Temair IV and in some others, M⁸ agrees strikingly with B R. I give instances in which B R M agree against the rest (see further § 2): 15, dosgni: fosgni; 23, ó cruaich: fo chruaich; 33–36, omitted (supplied in margin of R by later hand); 37–52, placed after 128 in B R, after 56 in M; 37, tarfas d'F. baile i tá: rostarfás d'F. mar tá; 43, fri, fria: ó; 53–56, omitted; 59, fian: laech; 62, ara eochair, etc.: forsin (for, forin) indell, etc.; 66, fota, fada: ba dib, ota; 70, etargain, eadragain: etargaire, etc.; 72, iar crín-amarc: cér clán-amarc, etc.; 83, uaidi: ón ráith, etc.; 89, fri: ó; 100, sain(san)-buaid: sáer-buaid; 123, coata, cota: atá; 125, om. Liaig; 127, dia sloind (sloinne): sloind, sloinnté, etc.; 129–144, omitted; 146, carad: dobeired, dochanad, etc.; 149–168, omitted (supplied in margin of R by later hand); 182, robris . . . for: dorat . . . do.

(b) B alone: 10, ilaid: rosilad, rosilaig, etc.; 59, ni: nirbo, bro; 89, nais: anís, sair siss, sair, etc.; 99, tuaid: atuaid; 125, duirb: duib duirb, 7 duirb, druibel; 147 (B M), nErenn: Muman; 169–180, omitted (B M).

(c) R alone: 17, breith: leith; 41, inglæ dais; a ngaeltis, a ceiltis, etc.; 59, bro: nírbo, ni; 95, in lis: a lis; 103, om. 'mon; 105, diadha: diata; 117, rostoirrchip: rosircis; 125, drui bet: duirb, dub duirb, 7 duirb; 170, cerdæ ima staib: cerda maroen, etc.; 172, in mír: midmir; 173, maroighi d'ar mór maige (sie leg.): muiridin do mál mide; 177, droma: dronna; 183, iar: re.

pt. ii, 26 (Inber Ailbne).

(a) B R: 14, sith-gairge: sír-gairge; 24, dluth-chóema: rochaema, etc.; 48, comradaig: comramaig; 67, om. a; 98, re slecht: roslecht.

(b) B alone: 17, femid; 25, om. nglan; 89, tre; 94, tadchaid.

⁸A collation of M, omitted from Part i, is given in the Addenda.

pt. ii, 80 (Alend).

- (a) B R: 6, find-cli: find-lí; 7, om. luam; 32, airdi (airde): ard-rí; 41, nodsussaig: nodassaig.
- (b) B alone: 33, buadan; 34, dronach; 49, Buireadach.
- (c) R alone: 10, connuargaib; 12, meas reot sega; 13, rumaing; 15, tricid; 25, bretec; 31, glind; 47, om. ngle.

pt. iii, 2 (Carmun).

- (a) B R: 3 and 43, os: as; 73, dia caine: tria gáine; 195, suad: slúag; 294, samaib: sluagaib.
- (b) B alone: 13, cumaid; 84, hairm.

pt. iii, 66 (Liamuin).

- (a) B R: 2, sloindfet: sluindet; 37, is(sé) sin senchas: é in senchas sin; 79, do(du): dar; 80, gnath-brége: glé-bréce; 87, don brut: co mbrut; 96, tria as: triasnid; 102, find-choraib: comóluib; 112, i fagadaib: ac fagadaib, etc.; 135, saeb: saeba.
- (b) B alone: 24, dub; 52, caim; 126, šeirairmim.
- (c) R alone: 7, blath: blad; 24, is ri; 27, om. acht; 27, adba; 34, Súide; 39, don; 42, dferaib; 52, cáini; 67, brath: brughaid, etc.; 83, fodrot; 90, roforred; 108, on: ní; 110, re claidh; 111, do fuair gen adhán; 114, drag; 124, na da lenden; 126, is saor airim.

pt. iii, 120 (Dún Crimthaind).

- (a) B R: 3, ocus tir: is do thír; 8, argat ngel: ngel argat; 42, ni robdar; nírb obair; 59, cissib (cisalb): cim saib, etc.; 67, diam durbach: dianad murbach; 68, ria luan: ria líad.
- (b) B alone: 13, mbennan; 14, rem; 33, om. fland; 39, om. choir; 51, uad maidead; 70, gad.
- (c) R alone: 1, la dochuaid; 2, in dáil; 26, con; 27, ríg ramindsi; 29, sciatha; 36, luid; 46, meic imail; 51, oen mad máidéid; 53, tallainn; 62, don; 66, setal; 69, ma; 72, inaro.

It will be seen that R stands alone much oftener than B.

Each of them, when unsupported, is wrong in at least nine cases out of ten; but as B diverges much less than R from the general tradition, its text is on the whole much more likely to be correct.

§ 2. γ and M.—(1) The facts stated in V, § 2, point to the existence of a group including Y Le MSS₂ S₃ H, deriving from a common ancestor γ . From this line of descent M's pedigree must have branched off at a comparatively early date. But the relation of M to the rest of the group is complicated and somewhat doubtful. The interpolation in M, which is discussed in an article in Ériu, x. 72, seq., makes it probable that the scribe, while taking γ as his chief source, also made use of a text of the Bd.-Ed. type. It has been noted in § 1 (a) that M shows affinity with B R at certain points: it also agrees with B R in presenting a short version of Sliab Fuait in 3 stanzas, while Lc S S₃ H have a conflate version in 11 stanzas (pt. iv, p. 166). Further, in the poems Temair III and Temair IV, M is very closely related to B R, as against the rest of the γ -group. The readings of M, omitted by an oversight from my critical apparatus, are given at p. 120 of the present volume. For Temair III details have been given in § 1 (a) above, showing that B R M have a version which differs from other copies by its arrangement and by its omissions.

In Temair IV, B R M omitted originally ll. 29–36 and 53–68. These passages are supplied in R's margins by the later hand which also added ll. 33–36 of Temair III. The text of M agrees with B R at critical points in Temair IV, e.g., 11, sochaide; 28, tuirem; 42, condáilte; 69, Anuall nuall; 75, glan-mac. M agrees with B against R in omitting 77–80 and 105–112: these lines are also omitted by some other copies.

In Temair I and II, and in the rest of the Dindshenchas, apart from the interpolation, M occupies an intermediate position between B R on the one side and the surviving members of the γ -group on the other. Instances of the agreement of B R M as against the γ -group are collected in § 1 (a). It is to be noted that where B and R differ, M is found agreeing with B much more often than with R. I give here the main cases in which B M agree against all other copies, and those in which R M stand alone, putting first the reading of

M and its associate, then the reading of other copies. I confine myself to Part iii.

B M.—iii, p. 8, 84, oenfecht: doennacht; p. 8, 89, rig omitted; p. 28, 26, dil: dílenn; p. 216, 16, cona (cusna) longaib: luid il-longaib; p. 234, 9, ba feith: am féith; p. 234, 12, cona muing: co muing, chumaing; p. 262, 43, sogairm: soairm; p. 288, 30, aen (en): choem; p. 348, 2, duin: duma; p. 388, 52, fodga, fodgaidh: fot dáig (fadeoid, Lc); p. 456, 81, rogab: rogab sel.

(ii) In the following cases, also taken from Part iii, the γ-group, including M, is found united against B R. I distinguish (a) cases in which L agrees with the γ-group; (b) those in which L agrees with B R; (c) those in which L is wanting. In each case the reading of the γ-group, represented by its surviving members, is put first.

γ is represented by M Y S S₃ H.

When the γ -group is divided, M is often found agreeing with Le S against the rest, less often with S₃ H. Its closest affinity within the group seems to be with Le.

§ 3. δ.—Our study of the order of the poems in V § 3 has made it clear that Y Le S S₃ H form a well-marked group. We may also probably add the fragmentary copies in S₂ and E, which, so far as they go, are nearest in arrangement and in text to Y and S. Their readings may be compared with those of the rest of the δ-group in the following loci:—

S₂.—Pt. i, Temair I, 27, 28; Temair II, 17, 29, 31, 43, 48, 61, 66, 68, 73; Temair III, 6, 42, 65, 67, 79, 92, 98, 102, 104, 111, 117, 142, 146, 155, 169, 178; Temair IV, 30, 38, 77–80, 88, 104; Achall, 19, 51, 75.

Pt. ii. Rath Ésa, 31; Inber Ailbne, 5, 14, 17, 21, 24, 39, 42, 63, 64, 79; Ochan, 2, 21, 61; Druim Daibreach, 19, 30; Lagin I, 12, 25.

E.—part ii, Fid nGaible, 1, 3, 6, 13; Mag Life, 10; Berba, 5, 11, 13; Móin Gaí Glaís, 13; Fafann, 6, 8, 16, 22, 30, 39; Almu II, 11, 12; Alend, 16, 26, 27, 29–32, 41, 47, 50.

Part iii, Bóand II, 3, 15, 16.

The above examples show that both S₂ and E are nearer to S than to any other copy, in regard to text.

E however has certain affinities with L. The most remarkable point of agreement between the two is the long passage Carmun 97–156 (part iii, pp. 10–14) which is found only in these two manuscripts. See also lines 4, 9, 19, 21–24, 37, 39, 45, 51, 53–56, 58, 59, 68, 84, 85, 90. It would seem that in this case the scribe of E has deserted his usual model in favour of some manuscript of the L-recension. Yet he can hardly have used L itself, as his text of this poem sometimes agrees with other copies against L, e.g., at lines 2, 14, 47, 92.

Instances of E's agreement with L in other poems will be found in part ii, Sliab Bladma, 4, 8, 17–20; Mag Life, 2.

For the group as a whole, it will be sufficient to collect the main instances occurring in part iii, where the δ-group (as represented in each case by its surviving members, and apart from minor differences), agrees against B R M.

As in the last section, I distinguish (a) those cases in which L agrees with the δ-group; (b) those in which L agrees with B R M; and (c) those in which L is wanting. In each case the readings of the δ-group, with or without L, are put first.

§ 4. Within the δ-group there are two subdivisions, one consisting of Y Le S, the other of S_s H.

(i) Y Le S are very close together, as the collation of their readings everywhere shows. It will be sufficient to quote here from the poems which survive in all three a few instances in which they agree against all other manuscripts. I place first the readings of Y Le S, then those of the other texts, disregarding minor differences.

(ii) In those poems which Y Le S have in common, it will be found that when Y differs from the other two, it is usually supported by the majority of the remaining manuscripts; whereas S frequently, and Le still oftener, stand unsupported. This shows that of the three Y best represents the original tradition.

These general statements may be exemplified by taking three successive poems from part iii, 110, et seq.

Benn Etair II.

Le S agree against Y: 28, airdighail, airdirghail: airmdigail; 46, is: co; 61, scath: cath; 66, ruirmech: ruipmeach. In 28 and 61 Y is supported by most other MSS.

Dún Crimthainn.

Le S v. Y: 4, ruire: ruide; 19, fuil: frith; 46, meic in smail: in scail; 46, maræn: mala main; 59, casaib: cimsaib; 72, feacht: fechtra. In every case Y has the support of most other MSS.

Y Le v. S: 19, bo, fa: as; 27, rígri Indsi Fail: rígh ba soillsi dóibh; 51, en da maidead: an budh maide. In 7, moniamda: moaniada; 12, anar dail, inar ndail: ina ndáil; 68, re luad: re luan, S is well supported by other manuscripts.

Y S v. Le: 14, ren, rein: reil; 50, crichid: crithir; 55, fir: fri fir; 56, gim: gnim; 66, snuad: sluag.

Ráth Chnámrossa.

Le S v. Y: 19, co ndeine: fo deime; 27, maris dlecht: marus det; 37, sin: dar; 52, na ratha: in rathsa. In each case Y has the support of most other copies.

Y Le v. S: 23, fri: in; 34, dorn-gel: drong-geal.

Y S v. Le: 18, eascar, eascur: escon; 22, romudacht, romughaidh: romúag; 30, co: la; 47, triathaib: trichaib; 51, co tí in bráth-sa: co la bratha. In 18, Le is supported by one other copy.

In the latter half of the Dindshenchas, which is wanting in Y, the especially close connection of Le S might be illustrated by hundreds of examples. It is sufficient to refer to a few of the more striking cases in pt. iv, where their readings diverge very markedly from those of all other texts.

p. 14, Nemithenn, 21–22, rewritten; p. 32, Carn Furbaide, 25–32, omitted; 34, rewritten; p. 72, Benn Boguine, 46–48, rewritten; p. 132, L. Oenfhir Aífe, 15, rewritten; p. 144, Rath Mór, 7, 8, 11, 12, rewritten; p. 196, Odras, 18, corrupt; p. 202, Cerna, 13–16, omitted; p. 224, Loch Séta, 5–8, transposed; 5–6, altered.

It is evident that Le S descend from ε through a link (σ). But further, it has been noted in I, § 3, that Le contains several poems peculiar to itself, and that these show many corruptions, proving that another link (λ) must have existed between Le and σ . The relations of the ε-group may be represented by a stemma:

The dotted lines denote an uncertain degree of relationship.

§ 5. It has been shown in V, § 5, that S₃ and H are closely connected by various points in the order of the poems. Their readings agree very frequently against all other texts. It will be enough to refer to my collations of the following loci in Part iii:—

p. 6, 57, raga in; p. 16, 195, snuadh; p. 24, 315, rígh oga (aghæe); p. 48, 13, bæs; p. 72, 82, ann immarcæn; p. 78, 8, motharmass; p. 78, 10, na ninber; p. 96, 3, fortá; p. 96, 15, gealtóir; p. 100, 11, a toait (a touith) uill; p. 110, 3, solam; p. 124, 50, crithide; p. 132, 46, mor in bét; p. 144, 13, gas; p. 150, 14, diblidhe; p. 156, 5, mac; p. 156, 10, an días; p. 172, 76, cíall; p. 176, 131, arsin; p. 206, 22, remi in cech ieth; p. 240, 16, a rígh-dumai; p. 258, 37, méide; p. 266, 4, in forainm; p. 270, 18, srethach . . . sárgnó; p. 270, 21, laochradh; p. 274, 61, luiben; p. 282, 90, ni rian; p. 288, 46, adrímimn; p. 340, 44, os; p. 348, 20, gnáth-geastal; p. 354, 74, (f)rith fogra; p. 376, 20, træthad; p. 390, 70, taobh; p. 404, 11, ág; p. 404, 18, oll-buaid; p. 426, 7–8, gan ceist . . . Muireisc; p. 428, 25, tor; p. 454, 52, daor-chrod; p. 460, 24, maidm fir-Mainne; p. 462, 38, riamh romeabuidh. It would be easy to add to these examples indefinitely.

In spite of this general agreement, there is often a marked divergence between the two manuscripts. They were both written by men who were scholars as well as scribes, and as such evidently considered themselves entitled not merely to copy but to edit, and aimed at producing a text which should be intelligible, even if they had to take liberties with their models. They seem to have occasionally consulted other manuscripts besides their principal exemplar, ζ. For the poem on Tailtiu (iv. 146) H departs widely from S₃, and must have used a copy akin to L, for it has 14 stanzas (ll. 49–56, 85–88, 157–160, 189–196, 201–220, 225–236) found in no other manuscript except L: one stanza (ll. 221–224) is peculiar to H. Although the scribes of S₃ nowhere depart so boldly from their exemplar, they frequently rewrite a line more or less completely. For examples, see my collations at iii. 26, 10; iv. 138, 66; 152, 84; 236, 30. A whole stanza is added in S₃ after Tailtiu 12; see iv. 414.

Apart from these more serious divergences, when S₃ and H differ, H is generally better supported by other manuscripts, especially by B and M, and is therefore probably the truer representative of ζ .

S₃, like H, now and then agrees unexpectedly with L against the other copies; perhaps the scribes had access to a manuscript closely related to L which they occasionally consulted. Instances of such agreement of L S₃ are however rare. The most important which occur in Part iii are these: p. 82, 72, is táinte; p. 96, 19, ndocht; p. 100, 17, rofich, rofigh; p. 114, 61, sciath; p. 128, 11, Lé fri (f)laith; p. 130, 31, sain; p. 166, 27, dáig; p. 260, 20, ba mac; p. 266, 1, cen dechair; p. 330, 13, dag-mac.

Manuscripts in which the scribe allows himself such a free hand must evidently be used with caution. Nevertheless, it is often worth while to consider what sense so good a scholar as Cucogriche O'Clery has made of a difficult passage.

VII. L AND THE REVISER.

§ 1. It has next to be considered on what principles we are to rely in judging of the relations of the text of L with that which underlies the various copies of the Second Recension.

In the first place, it is easy to show that the Reviser did not take L as the authority for his text. In many passages he has preserved the correct reading where it is corrupted in L. A small selection of passages will be enough to prove this point. In each instance I give first L's reading, then that of Rev. (as inferred from a collation of manuscripts of the Second Recension).

Part ii, p. 20, 48, leth-blai: baeth-bla (sic leg.); p. 22, 57, dind: baird (sic leg.); p. 24, 74, L omits ind ríg dia leith; p. 24, 77, lintais uile: clandais Buide; p. 24, 79, L omits na nglend; p. 24, 82, L omits Cuinn; p. 24, 83, glend: do gleic; p. 24, 90, athesc: airther; p. 24, 93, Ní root: Forsin róot; p. 38, 40, ic lí is luirgg: Fir Lí is Luirg (sic leg.); p. 42, 16, clár cech ri airdde: tar cethri hairde.

Part iii, p. 28, 25, Loch Cain: Loch Echach; p. 32, 87, dagbaig: dá gabait; p. 48, 19, maiditir: ráitir (sic leg.);

p. 66, 11, dianechrub : dindgnai dia ndechraib; p. 66, 19–20, leis co echrub na n-ingén | diarbart cethri coem-ingén: leis co hech-brug na n-inber | diarbo chethrur cóem-ingén; p. 130, 42, clannaib Cairpri: Cairpri célaich (sic leg.); p. 194, 14, domblaíd : dodáil; p. 264, 49, toraind : ní tairm té; p. 272, 39, na sasad sin : ná foelsad fill; p. 290, 58, rorathaiged : rothráiged; p. 300, 38, cona fhertaib fúirib : ic fertaib fer fuinid; p. 366, 7, Áth Olor : Áth Mór; p. 370, 68, im thulaig : im thual; p. 396, 8, immieilté : dímelte; p. 396, 13, Róngab garbi risin sel rogabe resin scél : Róngab gairbe risin scél; p. 410, 2, L omits diarb ainm; p. 458, 108, L omits tacha; p. 460, 11, tairlenmais : il-ernmais.

Part iv, p. 148, 37–8, fota táim thur Thalten iarna tromsetur : fota a cur i táin Thailten iar trom-thur; p. 152, 93, Ráth oen-doruis do shir combái: Fert oen-doruis d'fhír co n-áí.

§ 2. There are also many cases where the manuscripts of the Second Recension present corrupt versions of a text which seems to be correctly given by L. In the following examples I give first L's reading, then those of the Second Recension:

Part ii, p. 50, 12, bith-glaine : buad gaire, barrbuidi; p. 50, 14, pian : riad, riagh, ria; p. 58, 19, rotháid : rosaid, rossaidh, etc.; p. 60, 2, chét-churchaig : coir curchaig, coir crurhaig, etc.; p. 70, 55, ní hamdarc : nir armdoch, nir amhdacht.

Part iii, p. 6, 58, soraid : saguir, soghair, etc.; p. 8, 84, salm-gein : hairmgein, tairngen, hairm; p. 96, 19, ndérach : ndenach, denamh, nendum, etc.; p. 98, 26, mbél-chamm : mbélmall, mbélball; p. 100, 2, imthéit : tet, teit nan, etc.; p. 100, 17, rofích : rofígh, rofaid, rosaer; p. 130, 36, ansádail : anádarig, etc.; p. 130, 40, adbair (read adbair, with thalman in 39) ardosfail : cia hadbar dia ful, etc.; p. 170, 42, in chomóil : comcóir, commóir, achedoir; p. 172, 66, ba bidba : robadh bidg, dobo gnim, robo chin, etc.; p. 202, 36, ferr lim (read linni) Lugaid Femin : ni ferr linni no Femin, etc.; p. 204, 49, cacha imlodmar : gachar lodmairni, etc.; p. 204, 51, is fer : is ferr; p. 246, 54, uar-abann : uar-imgand, etc.

p. 250, 113, ngar : nglan, ngal; p. 250, 122, a chéim : a réim, in rem; p. 266, 11, a crannaig : a crannaib, for chranaib, fri crannaib; p. 288, 42, dialuid S. co soer-lúad : doluid S. o sáer-sláig, etc.; p. 366, 20, ellaig : erraig; p. 440, 24, céin trebait Hérinn : cét-aitréb Érenn, etc.; p. 450, 4, lochrad ; locrac, lochan, lochlán; p. 456, 72, trénn-saithe : trenaithé, trensaithe, trenfaiti, etc.

§ 3. The facts noted in the last two paragraphs might be explained by supposing that the scribe of L and the Reviser worked from a common original, which is correctly represented sometimes by the one, sometimes by the other. But this explanation will not account for the numerous instances in which the difference between the two sets of readings is so wide that they cannot be derived from the same text. In the following selection of examples the readings of L stand first. I give first some cases where L's reading is corrupt, and it seems probable that the Reviser, finding the same corruption in his original, emended to the best of his ability :

Part ii, p. 40, 63, nirbo comlond : nírb fhand a chomul; p. 66, 11-12, ingen is mathair co n-aeb | athair is mac co mor-[] : athair is máthair co n-aib | ingen is bráthair bláth-cháin. The last syllable in L is erased and aeb supplied in the margin. Apparently the word was illegible in the archetype : Rev. has rewritten the line.

Part iii, 200, 14, riasiu adfeided miad[] : riasiu ademad (atecmad) buaid miled. (The last word is illegible in L.) p. 202, 45, is ferr domdreib : ferr do bantracht. (Read d'aindríb.) p. 398, 26, hi crích Bérre in mbuanchend : hi crích Láigde na leibenn (na laech-bend). (Rev. alters to correct the faulty metre. Read hi cocrích Bérre). p. 456, 96, etir mnae is muntir : robáid in mnaí's a muintir.

Part iv, 152, 95, Ratha i trenaib condagaib : Ferta cen dorsi drena (cen doirssi chena, co ndoirrsib trena, can doirsib can trenaib). L's reading may perhaps be right, but if so I do not understand it, neither did the Reviser.

§ 4. Instances like these, which point to corruption in the archetype, are by no means common. Much more numerous are those in which L and the Reviser both present quite grammatical and intelligible but widely different texts. In such cases there is a probability, prima facie, that the original text has been altered by the Reviser rather than by the scribe of L. For there is other evidence that the Reviser considered himself entitled to take editorial liberties for reasons of his own. Apart from his rearrangement of the order of the poems, and his omission of certain poems, it will be shown in § 7 that he sometimes abridged drastically, and once at least re-wrote much of a poem which he found difficult to understand (Áth Liac Finn).

The apparent motives for the minor liberties which he seems to have taken with his text may be grouped under a few heads :

(a) Metre.

The Reviser introduces rhyme or alliteration where these are absent from the original text (assumed to be represented by L) or alters the scansion. Examples (L's reading first) :

Part ii, p. 50, 2, ba gním ole, ba domna hír : i nDinn Ríg ba tenba truag.

Part iii, p. 16, 207–8, nach taidli tart | cen daidbri dia n-iarmoracht : co saidbri sét | cen daidbri dia ndichomét.
(The change in 208 involves a change in 207.)

p. 32, 83, Bóinne (trisyll.) co mblaíd : Bóinne (disyll.) buaid ar blaíd (bág co mblaíd).

p. 156, 15–16, Luidis Dóë, truag in tsét | co Lind Dóë dia lán-éc : Luidis Dóë cen dalmud | co Lind Doí (monosyll.) dia dían-bádud.

p. 200, 3, Ba méite nochiad frossa : Uime roferad frossa.
L's reading should be kept; cf. L L 123 b 20, Ba méite cach dér nocíthe co bráth ba dia bith-choíniud (quoted by Bergin, Ériu x. 190).

p. 242, 19, in fer fallán, nar dil : in fer fallán co fraig.

p. 346, 99, na ndruad ngrind : inad ruad rind. This seems to be Rev.'s reading: it gains alliteration, at the expense of the metre.

p. 348, 8, diar'gell Ériu a llán-torud (sic leg.): diar'gell Ériu il-torud.

p. 444, 76, fora nascius co forcenn: ronaisces foirb co forcenn.

Part iv, p. 10, 32, dia šluag rodelbus sunna: fofuair in senchas sunna, etc. Read rodelbus dia šluag sunna.

p. 32, 29, Secht mbliaidna déc a aes: Secht mbliaidna déc ba hi a áes, etc.

Read deēc, the usual scansion in Saltair na Rann. The Ds. poem is by Cúán Ó Locháin, † 1024.

p. 104, 42, cona ngáib, cona scíathaib, cona congaib: im Néit mac Induí in allaid.

For gáib (disyllabic) cf. T B C (Wi) 3023, de gaaib aire.

(b) Language.

The Reviser seems sometimes to reject archaic forms and unusual words, and to substitute more familiar equivalents.

Part i, p. 10, 49, erlam: coimdui.

Part ii, p. 82, 44, tibit tulmag: fri forgla huath, etc. Cf. Meyer, Bruchstücke, i. 154. The meaning of Rev.'s reading is not clear to me.

p. 84, 51, ail focheird: cloch roteilg.

Part iii, p. 30, 58, co n-étuachli: cona tuaichli. Altered perhaps for the sake of alliteration: the sense suffers.

p. 80, 42, 'na command comméit: 'na muintir coemnáir (comláin).

p. 150, 9, olc líth: olc dil.

L's reading should stand: it is the contrary to fó líth.

p. 246, 64, is a hard-grenach: iarna himglanad.

p. 252, 135–6, luaidset din t̄slait | furaigset, etc.: fogníset gait | sníset, etc.

The use of (f)úraigim ("bind") is peculiar; the substitution of sníset involves the change in 135.

p. 438, 18, mag-deine: mórdéine. See Glossary.

p. 446, 78, eclonnach: anglondach. Read éclandach, properly "outlawed."

p. 456, 82, fuargg: fual. See Glossary.

Part iv, p. 4, 31, rodofoimairn dia sil: rosomairn dia sil sin, etc. Read rodasomairn, and see O'Brien in Ériu XI. 164. Infixed -da- was obsolescent: cf. rodaacht, below.

p. 48, 85–6, Bid nél do Nár, ní ba nert, tiachtain chucum- sa dar cert : Nár, ní géba, ní raga, bid Nár ic tabairt chatha.

The Reviser is puzzled by nél = “disgrace,” and rewrites the couplet, borrowing clumsy from 87.

p. 50, 112, slaittea na slóig : roslecht in slóg, etc.

p. 64, 93, Iarsein atbert aithese : Adrubairt a aithesc;

p. 66, 109, Atbert a chartad : adrubaírt a chur.

p. 140, 89, rosfuachtastar : dochuaid chuca.

The form rosfuachtastar is strange, and perhaps corrupt, but could not have developed out of Rev.’s reading.

p. 142, 117, cuach : fuan. See Glossary.

p. 156, 134, asrogart : ropritchais.

p. 158, 164, oc promad na fían-chéite : do molad na prim-chéite.

Read perhaps fromad, a later form of promad.

p. 158, 177, rodaacht : imroacht.

(c) In a few passages the Reviser seems to think that something in the subject-matter needs correcting:

Part iii, p. 8, 85, A dó trichat ceithri cét : Dá blíadain trichat trí cét.

Rev. seems to quarrel with the accepted date of S. Patrick’s mission: or else he is simply anxious to introduce bliadain, ignoring chronology.

p. 16, 203–4, dia láim chlí, cen daidbri nduaíl, forad ríg Gaibli géc-luain : dia cliu, fri cech luathgair luind, forad ríg Cruachain chleth-chuirr.

Here he brings the King of Connacht into a gathering of Leinster princes. Cruachain (gen.) is not admissible for Cruachan or Cruachna.

p. 96, 5–12. These two stanzas are reduced to one by the Reviser, who omits 5, 6, 11, 12, and places 7–8 after 9–10. The motive for this procedure is obscure, but there can be no doubt that both stanzas belong to the original poem, which was probably not written for the Dindshenchas series.

p. 376. In this poem the ifuture tense is used in L in lines 9–16; the Reviser has substituted the past or present.

p. 440, 3–4, carn forsn-dessad-sa innossa | Conaill chail . . . : carn forsndessid innossa | Conall cáel . . .

The Reviser, misunderstanding the poet’s meaning, substitutes the third person for the first, and alters line 4 accordingly. This makes innossa meaningless, and is inconsistent with lines 101–4.

p. 446, 81. Rogáid díb ben meic Mágach: rochuindig díb mac Mágach. Stokes (Rev. Celt. xv. 479) alters rogáid Ceat in the prose version to rogáid ben Cheit, relying no doubt on L's reading; but the “wife of Magu's son” is probably Medb, who had given Conall land in Aidne (l. 7).

Part iv. p. 46, 67–8, garit ó Chommar co Delt | re tochell re techtairecht : im dáil míš, ba móir in mod, | re tinól nó re telgod (etc.).

The place-names were probably unfamiliar to the Reviser: see my note.

p. 68, 144, acht mac dia ngairthea Conaing : acht mad Daire ocus Conaing. Rev. alters to bring in Daire: cf. Rev. Celt. xvi. 153. L's reading is confirmed by BB 170a 59.

p. 148, 25–8. Rev. substitutes an entirely different stanza, sacrificing an essential point in the narrative for no obvious reason.

§ 5. There are two poems of which the Reviser seems to have had before him versions which differed considerably from L's original.

Part iii, p. 88, seq., Bairenn Chermain. For ll. 13–16 and 37–40 all manuscripts of the Second Recension present a version quite different from that of L. Lines 29–32 are differently placed. Different verbs are used in 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 38. In 24, for L's Fognad duib ág is ernbas, the Second Recension has readings which point to an original Sníd uainn re hág re hernbas; this however may be an attempt to correct L's text.

Part iii, p. 200, seq., Mag Femin II. This poem evidently was not written for the Dindshenchas collection, but in honour of the Kings of Cashel; it may date from about the year 1000, judging by the linguistic forms. Lines 53–56 have been added to supply an explanation of the name Femen, as the Dinsenchas formula requires. Lines 37–44 and 57–60 are in L alone, and there are many other marked differences of text between L and the Second Recension especially in 2, 3, 7, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 22, 25, 27, 28, 30, 31, 35, 36, 45, 47, 49, 50, 51.

§ 6. The text of the Second Recension contains many stanzas which are not found in L. As a rule these are pious additions at the end of a poem, which are obviously due to the Reviser, and do not call for further comment. Except for these the only omissions due to the scribe of L that I have noted are the following:

Part ii, p. 6, 73–6; p. 20, 37–40; p. 50, 25–8 (a quatrain probably added by Rev.).

Part iii, p. 4, 21–4 (due to similarity of 17 and 21); p. 18, 211–12, 215–20 (see below); p. 230, 61–4 (due to similarity of 57 and 61); p. 276, 17–20 (due to repetition of Dalo in 13 and 17).

Part iv, p. 46, 61–4; p. 62, 49–52 (due to similarity of ingin, ingen, 48 and 52).

As to the passage iii. 18, 209–220, which is represented in L by a single quatrain, it is to be noted that lines 217–220 are, as remarked in my commentary, probably an addition due to the Reviser. The two preceding quatrains, though in themselves unobjectionable, may very well be an expansion of L's single quatrain. They do not add to L's text anything new: the Secht ngraifne of 211 have already been described in lines 169–192, which the Reviser omits.

§ 7. Much more numerous and more important are the passages in L's text which are omitted from the Second Recension.

(a) The Second Recension presents in abridged form four poems of which L preserves a fuller version. These are:—

Part iii, p. 2, seq., Carmun: in L, 78 quatrains, in the Second Recension, 34. The Reviser gives in full the story of the eponymous heroine, but omits as irrelevant most of the description of the Oenach.

Part iv, p. 42, seq., Druim Criach: in L, 52, Sec. Rec., 30. Rev. omits the last 76 lines, which the author, Cúán úa Lothchán, wrote in honour of his patron, Maelsechlainn.

p. 146, seq., Tailtiu: in L, 58, in Sec. Rec., 43 (except in H, which follows L). Rev. again omits Cúán's panegyric of Maelsechlainn at the end.

p. 162, seq., Sliab Fuait: in L, 14, in B R, 3, in LeSS₃H (complete version), 11. The Reviser substituted for L's poem a dindshenchas in three stanzas: the later manuscripts produced a complete version by combining this with a selection from the longer poem.

(b) The Second Recension's version of Ath Líac Find (iv. 40) is evidently an attempt of the Reviser to edit the older version, found in L (iv. 36), in order to smooth away its difficulties: see Commentary. (The second copy of this poem in M, which in the main agrees with L, does not belong to the Second Recension: see Ériu X. 70.)

(c) In Achall (i. 46, seq.) the Reviser has arranged the stanzas in a sequence different from that in L (see Commentary), and has also omitted, singularly enough, the three stanzas which refer to the author, Cinaed ua Hartacán, and his patron, Amlaib of Dublin. (This suggests that these three stanzas were originally continuous.)

(d) A few stanzas occur here and there in the text of L which are not to be found in any manuscript of the Second Recension. Of these, some seem to have been added by the scribe of L at the end of a poem. The only cases in which they were probably part of the original text are the following:—

iii, p. 96, 5–12: the Reviser has omitted 5–6, 11–12, and inverted the order of the two remaining couplets.

iii, p. 202, 37–44, and p. 204, 57–60: L's text of 37–40 is corrupt, but does not seem spurious.

iv, p. 66, 105–8, and p. 68, 157–160.

§ 8. On the whole, then, it appears that although the Reviser did not hesitate to take editorial liberties with the model which he found, by altering the arrangement, by omitting, abridging, and emending at his discretion, still his text is fundamentally the same as that of L. Accordingly, we may accept his readings (as inferred from the various manuscripts of the Second Recension) where they offer a correct version of an original which is corrupt in L. But where his readings diverge widely from those of L (as in the instances collected in §§ 4 and 5), I regard them as arbitrary emendations, and admit them only when L is corrupt beyond restoration.

In my edition, I now think that I have treated L with too much respect, and I have accordingly noted in the Corrigenda a number of passages where the Reviser's readings are to be preferred. But it must always be borne in mind that the Reviser deliberately edited his text, whereas there is no reason to think that the scribe of L tried to do more than copy his original.⁹ It is true that he was an inaccurate copyist, as Meyer has repeatedly insisted. Indiscriminate criticism, however, does no more than shake one's faith in the scribe: it affords no principle by which to reject or accept his readings. Neither is it safe to treat metrical correctness as an infallible criterion, although it certainly is a most useful guide. There are wide differences between one poem and another in strictness or looseness of metre: there is no invariable canon. Each poem must be studied separately from this point of view, and I have shown reason to believe that the Reviser frequently introduced emendations merely to satisfy his own notions of metrical law.

VIII. O'DUINN'S POEM.

§ 1. In the article in Hermathena (1932), already referred to, I printed a long poem purporting to be composed in the year 1166 by Gillanaemh Ua Duinn, which gives in a summary form the legends of 97 places, allowing as a rule one quatrain to each place. Nearly all these places appear in the Second Recension of the Dindshenchas, with the same legends; and the few which are not included in the first draft of the Second Recension are all to be found either in L or in Bd.-Ed., namely, Cnogba, Séig Mossad, Slab Cua, Cnoc Tarbga; the only doubtful case is O'Duinn's st. 101, which may correspond to L's Fert Medba (see M. Ds. iv. 366). Lige Fintain is part of Luimnech (see Bd. 20, Metr. Ds. iii. 274); and Findloch is part of Ath Luain (see Rev. Celt. xvi. 272). The poem is arranged in a geographical sequence according to provinces. Beginning, like the Reviser, with Temair, O'Duinn works through Meath (st. 5 to 27) and Westmeath (st. 28 to 37). Then in st. 38 he says he will visit the North after Tethba and Brega (i.e., Westmeath and Meath: read iar túr Tethba is Breg in buair), and there follow 14 places in Ulster. Then (st. 53) he promises "a guide to the sites of Leinster," which occupies st. 54-68. Next we have senchas mor-dindgna na Muimnech (st. 69), ending with Loch Dergderc. At st. 85 we pass into Connaught: read Ránac co hEchtga (this should be marked as Part Five of the poem). Thus the arrangement is more systematic than the Reviser's, and shows a more conscious reflection on the geographical distribution, though (as has been remarked on p. 15 above) there are several errors about particular places.

These considerations led me to suggest in my article in Ériu x. 75 that O'Duinn worked on an early draft of the Second Recension, represented by B R, whose contents he summarised, selecting and arranging at his own discretion, and it followed from this assumption that this Recension must be earlier than 1166, the date of O'Duinn's poem. A closer comparison of O'Duinn's work with the text of B R on the one hand and with those of L and Bd.-Ed. on the other has caused me to modify these conclusions. For it shows that where the two Recensions differ in points of detail, O'Duinn—so far as one can judge from his brief summaries—is usually found to agree with the First Recension against the Second. Further, where the two forms of the First Recension differ, he seems to follow Bd.-Ed. against L. The instances here collected are arranged in the order adopted by O'Duinn.

A. Agreement of O'D. with First Recension.

1. Cnogba. Included in O'D. 9 and Bd. 43; not in L or Rev. (first draft).

2. Cleitech. O'D. 13, ag caeinead Cormaic h. Cuind; L Bd., ac coíniud C. m. Airt; Rev., no bás C. h. Cuind, etc.
3. Cerna. O'D. 14, Cearna ainm sídaigi; Bd., Cerna ba hainm don sídaidi fil ann; Rev. Cerniam ainm tuisig in sída fil ann. L omits the paragraph.
4. Lia Nothain. O'D. 18, siur Seantuinde Beirri; L Bd., a siur Sentuinne; Rev. omits.
5. Druim Suamaig. O'D. 26, Caeinlech ó tá in muine móir (sic leg. v. infra); L Bd., Unde Dr. S. et Móin Caindlig; Rev., Unde Dr. S. 7 Ard Caindlig.
6. Loch nAindind. O'D. 32, Tri locha . . . Ainnind Fuar as Cime; Bd.-Ed. also mention these three names; Rev. omits Cimme. Not in L.
7. Mag nÍtha. O'D. 41, do dígail ar Mac Cecht, etc. (rodíglad, N); Bd., dia dígail doluid Lug; Rev. has nothing about avenging Ith's death. Not in L.
8. Tuag Inbir. O'D. 45, Tuag ingean Conaill—Conall mac Etersgeoil; Bd., T. ingen Chonaill Chollamrach meic Et.; Rev., T. ingen Ch. Choll. dalta Chonairi m. Et.
9. Sliab Fuait. O'D. 50 refers to the story of Cenn Berraide, which is in Ed. but not in Rev., nor in L-verse.
10. Lia Lingatain. O'D. 52, mac do Laegaire Lingid; L, Nó combad ó Lingit m. Loegaire; Rev., Lindgadan m. Læghaire; Ed. omits.
11. Dublind. O'D. 54, 2, Marghein (sic leg. v. infra); Bd., Margin; L, Marggini; Rev., Mairgine (but in the verse all texts have Margin).
12. Fid nGaible. O'D. 56, Gaible m. Eteman (Edamain, N F) eigis; L, Gabul m. Ethadoin m. Nuadat; Bd., Gabol m. Ethamdain m. Eciss; Rev., Gaible m. Etadoin m. Nuadat (but S₂ E, Gaible m. Etamain m. Ecis m. Nuadat).
13. Sruthar Matha. O'D. 59 (corresponding to L 169a, Bd. 51), Odba uain-chenn (sic leg.): so L Bd.; Rev. (Sruthar Matha) omits uain-chenn.
14. Loch Garman. O'D. 64, Garman . . . dorigni coll (sic leg.); L, rachoill in G. a recht; Ed., rocholl in G. a rechtga (partly obliterated in Bd.); not in Rev.
15. Séig Mossad. O'D. 71; L Bd.; not in Rev.
16. Mag Femin. O'D. 72, Fea is Feimhean (sic leg.);

L Bd.-Ed., Femen 7 Fera, dá derbrathair; Rev., Tri meic Mogaich i. Femen 7 Fera 7 Fea.

17. Sliab Cua. O'D. 73; L Bd.-Ed.; not in Rev.

18. Mag nAidni. O'D. 87, da bassaib; Bd.-Ed., a basa for araili dogrés; Rev., tofascad a dá glac; not in L-prose.

19. Benn Boguinè. O'D. 93, Fintan (hypermetric; Fiacha, F., v. infra.); L, Find; Ed., Findchad; Rev., Fiachu. In the verse, L like Rev. has Fiacha.

20. Cnoc Tarbga. O'D. 96 and 104 seem to derive from the article on Mag Tarba and Findloch in L Bd., not from Rev.'s Ath Luain, which mentions Tarbga, but not Findloch.

B. Agreement of O'D. with Second Recension.

1. Temair. O'D. 5 corresponds with Rev. 1 § 3 (Rev. Celt. xv. 278); not in L Bd.-Ed.

2. Dubthir. O'D. 16, Daire; Rev., Daire; L Bd., Dairíne (but Bd. quotes a quatrain with Daire).

3. Ess Ruaid. O'D. 39, Maine milsgoth; Rev., Maine milscoth; L Bd., M. milscothach.

4. Ailech. O'D. 42, Ailech ó ailech Fer Fálga; Rev., Ailech ó ail-ech asberar i. ail eich, ar it eich tucsat a ailbech la Frigrend . . . do Fomuirib Fer Fálga. L (verse) says nothing about Fir Fálga. The article is not in Bd.-Ed.

5. Lecc Thollchind. O'D. 68, écht Saxon; Rev., i cath fri Saxanu; L does not mention the Saxons. The article is not in Bd.-Ed.

6. Sliab Miss. O'D. 79, 3, Nó ó mífhiss maicni Míled (sic leg. v. p. 83, infra); Rev., Sl. Mífis araní ba mífis i. ba hanfis do macaib Míled; not in L Bd.-Ed.

C. O'D. differs from L, Bd.-Ed., and Rev.

1. Mag Breg. O'D. 7 has nothing in common with the articles in the other texts. In point of order, he agrees with Bd.-Ed. in combining Mag Breg with Temair; so also does M, while Rev. generally places it late in the list.

2. Port Láirge. O'D. 74 has Congal Fomoir, where L Bd.-Ed. Rev. all have Roth (or Roth) mac Cithaing. One copy of O'D. (F) has Roth mac Riogain.

3. Loch Dergdeirc. O'D. 84 calls the poet Athirne; L Rev., Ferchertne; not in Bd.-Ed.

4. Cloenloch. O'D. 103, Claen m. Ingair eigis Alban; L Bd. Rev. call him cennaige.

§ 2. We may infer from this analysis that O'Duinn had before him a text of the Dindshenchas which closely resembled that of Bd.-Ed. Of the contrary instances given under B above, 2 and 3 are trivial; in 4, 5, the article is missing from Bd.-Ed., so these cases prove nothing as to the relation between Bd.-Ed. and O'Duinn. There remain only two instances where O'Duinn agrees with the Reviser against Bd.-Ed., compared with 19 instances of the contrary relations. There are also the four instances under C, in which O'Duinn differs from all versions of the Dindshenchas; but of these the only one of much consequence is the substitution in Port Láirge of Congal Fomoir for Roth mae Cithaing, which is certainly puzzling.

O'Duinn's poem includes 18 places which are missing from Bd.-Ed.; but we are free to suppose that this is due to the fragmentary condition of these texts. Only one article in Bd.-Ed.'s list is not represented in O'Duinn, namely, Laigin. Perhaps he was satisfied with his reference to eolas dind Laigen (st. 53).

I do not find any clear evidence that O'Duinn made use of the poems in either Recension; and, as he omits 63 places which are in L's list, I infer that he worked upon a selection from the prose of the First Recension, substantially the same as Bd.-Ed. If this was so, his poem affords us the means of completing Bd.-Ed.'s fragmentary list by adding the 18 places referred to above. They are these: Mag Findabhrach, Mag Léna, Gáirech, Irarus, Áth nGabla, Loch Silenn, Ailech, Maistiu, Moin Gái Glais, Belach Gabráin, Belach Con Glais, Lecc Thollchinn, Carn Uí Néit, Crotta Cliach, Carn Feradaig, Loch Dergdeirc, Fert Medba (?), Móin Tíre Náir. It must be added that O'Duinn's notice of Loch Silenn seems to refer to a legend quite different from that which L has under Turloch Silinne, and that Áth nGabla and Mag Léna are not in the L-Ds. as we have it.

If the view here taken is correct, the geographical arrangement of his poem must be independent of that adopted by the Reviser; and it is improbable that the Reviser and O'Duinn can be the same person (as I formerly suggested), seeing that the order in the Second Recension is quite different from O'Duinn's.

§ 3. My edition of his poem was taken from the Book of Uí Maine (M). I failed to notice that there are other copies in two of the Gaelic MSS. in the National Library of Scotland, numbered XIX and XLII : see Mackinnon's Catalogue, pp. 137, 157. Both of these copies are acephalous : XIX begins at st. 15, XLII at st. 56. Here follows a selection from their readings, which in many cases confirm the conjectural emendations made in Ériu x. 76, seq., to which I here add : st. 6, read Múr Tea mná Erimóin uasail.

X. ORIGINS OF THE DINDSHENCHAS.

§ 1. There is no means of fixing with precision the date at which the collection was first formed. It is possible, as is suggested on p. 21 above, that it grew out of a number of shorter collections with a more local character.

The knowledge of the place-names of a particular neighbourhood was from very early times an essential part of the education of the higher orders of society. It had an obvious military value. One of the first lessons that CuChulainn, the typical warrior, has to learn is to recognise and name correctly every point visible from the confines of Ulster (LU 5102-7).

Such knowledge is equally necessary to the poet. For him every point of vantage is associated with a legend which it is his business to know. This is well illustrated by the story told about the ghost of Flann mae Lonain as an introduction to one of the poems on Sliab Echtga; see vol. iii, 532. In the teaching of the schools, the Dindshenchas, as a combination of history and geography, must have held a prominent place; according to the tract on the duodecim partes poeticae it was part of the course for the eighth year (Ir. Texte iii. 50, line 2). As an aid to memory, lays were composed for each place, telling briefly its legend—or legends, for there was often more than one to account for its name. The scholar is asked by his master: “How did such a place get its name?” He replies: “That is easily told,” and repeats the lay. The places selected are usually those with which some incident in the popular legends is associated. It may be a ford where CuChulainn stood at bay, or a síd where Oengus or Midir had his home, or a mountain where Conaire’s enemies had gathered to surprise the king. Or again, it may be a tale centering round a lonely rath or sacred well, which is of purely local interest and has not passed into the general stream of legend that goes round all the provinces of Ireland. But there remain many places not thus provided for, and their people do not like to be left out of account. They demand a story and a lay, and the poet must not admit that he is at a loss. So, with the help of a fanciful etymology, he invents a story, puts it into verse and adds it to his collection. Thus the dubláidi dindshenchais come to be regarded as a special type of literature: see ds. of Carmun, 243.

§ 2. There were probably at first not one Dindshenchas but many, each collected by a different school, and concerned chiefly with places within the province to which the school belonged. It is only later that some compiler has the idea of gathering all the separate dindshenchassa into a single collection. It was probably he who also bethought himself of writing a brief prose summary for each lay, as a further aid to the learner. Here the question of date arises: when was this collection first put together? The verse evidently belongs to different periods.

I subjoin a list of poets to whom the poems named are attributed in the MSS.:—

Mael Muru (Othna), †887: Áth Liac Finn (L).

Cormae mac Culennáin, †908: Dún Cuirc (hardly genuine).

Cinaed ua Hartacáin, †974: Temair II (B R S S₃), Temair IV (all copies but L), Achall, Ochan (L), Brug na Bóinde I, Benn Étair I (L), Bóand III (see p. 25, above).

Mac Liac, †1016: Carn Conaill (L).

Flann Mainistrech, †1056: Ailech II (L). This poem is not part of the L-Dindshenches.

Eochaid éolach ua Céirín, fl. circa 1050: Loch Garman (L S).

The dates of the following are unknown to me:—

Aed ua Carthaig:¹⁰ Mide (L).

Cormae fili: Temair IV (so L; other copies attribute the poem to Cinaed ua Hartacáin).

Cú Arad: Ailech III (see my note, pt. iv. 403).

Mae Nia mac Oengusa: Brug na Bóinde II, Nás (L).

Mac Raith ua Paain: Cenn Febrat (L) (see my note, pt. iii. 518, at foot; and Heldenage, 38).

Bard Maile: Tuag Inbir (L).

¹⁰In his Primer of Irish Metrics, p. 27, Meyer ascribes the poem on Mide (LL 199b) to "Aedh Ollabhar ua Carthaigh, 12th cent." His authority for the name and date of this poet is no doubt to be found in O'Curry's account of a poem in R.I.A. 23 M 23, p. 32, which he attributes to "Hugh Ollabhair O'Carthy, the chief poet of Connacht in the reign of Torlogh mór O'Conor, A.D. 1156": see his (unpublished) Catalogue of R.I.A. MSS., Series I, p. 67. If O'Curry's dating of this poet and Meyer's ascription to him of the poem on Mide were correct, my arguments as to the date of the L-Dindshenches would have to be revised. But O'Curry read his manuscript too hastily. It contains a tract on the rights and obligations of the MacDermots of Moylurg which begins thus (p. 32): "Sochair clanne Maolruanaidh annso do reir leabhar Moluing (?) et Saltrach Caisil, amhail do frith o Toirrdealbhach

Nearly all these ascriptions rest on the authority of L alone, and most of them relate to poems about places in Meath or Leinster, the provinces in which the scribe of L was principally interested. We may probably assume that Aed ua Carthaig, Fulartach and Cormac fili were poets of one or other of these provinces. Merely fictitious attributions to Colum Cille, Finn mac Umaill, etc., need not be noticed here.

I have shown (pt. iii. 461) that the poem on Carmun must have been written after 1040, and I have suggested that it was composed for the Oenach held in 1079. If this assumption is correct, it yields the latest date assignable on purely internal evidence to any part of the verse-Dindshenchas in L, and it would indicate that this collection as a whole, and the prose text which was presumably written when the collection was first formed, cannot be dated earlier than the close of the eleventh century.

§ 3. We might hope to find other means of fixing an approximate date for the collection if we could show that parts of it are based on texts which can be dated with some mhór ua Conchobhair airdrigh Eireann, et ḫ Aodh mac Ceallaigh mac Dubhda, etc., etc. Et deirid priomhleabhair fairbhthe Eireann gurab e adhbhar na sochar sin dfhaghail do Chloinn Maolruanaidh do comhaidh as Righeacht Connacht, et rochomadar uaisle et airdrioghruiugh Leith Chuinn et Connacht go huilidhe na sochar sin," etc. At the end of the prose tract is added: "Et agso duain da dearbhadh doroine ollamh Connacht i. Aodh ollabhair h. Carrthaigh: Ata sonn sochar na Riogh [16 quatrains]." It is not stated here, nor does the language suggest, that either the tract or the poem was written in the reign of Turlough O'Conor: on the contrary it is clear that the tract refers to the rights which he granted as being of long standing. O'Curry's statement that Aedh Ollabhar lived in his reign is merely a hasty guess. In fact, in a later volume of the same Catalogue (H. and S. iii. p. 612) he describes another poem in 23 L 17, f. 136a, Tosach féile fairsinge, as written by "Hugh Oll(a)bhair O Carrthaeidh ollave of Cruachan in praise of the hospitality of Tomaltagh McDermot, Lord of Moylurg, about the year 1400." Professor T. F. O'Rahilly tells me that this poem is elsewhere and with more probability attributed to Torna O'Maoilchonaire, +1468. However that may be, it is probable that the scribe of 23 L 17 had reason to believe that Aodh Ollabhar lived in the 15th century; and it is certain that O'Curry had no evidence for putting him into the 12th. Meyer added a fresh error by identifying this Aodh Ollabhar with the Aed ua Carthaig who wrote the Dindshenchas poem.

approach to exactness, and which can be shown to be later than any of the poets in our list. But such exact dates are hard to find. The sources on which the Dindshenchas draws fall under various categories. Certain articles are founded on quasi-historical documents such as Lebor Gabála, the genealogical tracts, the Lives of Patrick and other saints. Much is no doubt derived from native folk-lore. The main sources are, however, neither historical nor popular but literary. The character of the collection as a whole is secondary, not original: it is one of the epiphytes that grew luxuriantly from the old stem of myth and saga, as the epic period drew to an end, and literature from being creative became parasitic. It is only the first category of sources that offers much hope of finding a definite indication of date. Folklore has none: and as to myths and heroic legends, the texts are almost all much older than the eleventh century, and therefore afford no help for our present purpose. Even if we have reason to believe that the extant versions of one or two of the tales which have been used for the Dindshenchas are not earlier than the twelfth century, we get no clear guidance; first, because the dating of such texts is at best only an approximation within wide limits; and secondly, because all these tales have been rehandled time and again, and we cannot be sure in any particular instance that the Dindshenchas has not borrowed from an earlier version than any that we know.

Here follows a list of sources, with the names of the Dindshenchas articles borrowed from them, wholly or in part. Fuller particulars will be found in Thurneysen's Heldensage, or in my notes in previous volumes:—

1. Aided Ailella. Source of Mag Luirg. See Heldensage, 582.
2. Aided Oenfhir Aife. Source of Lecht Oenfhir Aife. Heldensage, 406.
3. Aided Cheltchair. Used for part of Sliab Callann (Rev.). Heldens., 574, n. 1.
4. Aided Chonchobair. The Ed. version of Sliab Fuait (and 2 copies of Rev.) borrow the story of Cenn Berraide.
5. Aided Chonroi. Source of Findglais. Heldens., 436–7, 443.

6. Aided Echach meic Muireda. An old version of the tale, now lost, was probably the source of Sliab Miss, Loch Rí and Tuag Inbir; the Aided of LU, pp. 39–41, borrows in turn from Tuag Inbir and Loch Rí; see above, pt. iv, p. 390.

7. Baile in Scáil. May be the source from which the references to Bloe, Bluiene and Mael in Temair III are derived.

8. Banshenchas. The poem on Carmun (251) mentions this along with the tales, poems and other compositions which were recited at the Fair. The banshenchas referred to must be an earlier compilation than the one attributed to Gilla Modutu, which is dated to the year 1147 (see Heldensage, 46): for internal evidence seems to prove that the Carmun poem was written not later than 1079; see my note in pt. iii, 471.

9. Bruiden Da Choca. The extant version seems to make use of the Ds. of Druim Suamaig, which is itself no doubt based on an earlier form of the tale. Heldens., 593.

10. Bruiden Da Derga. The older version is used for Benn Étair II and Ráth Chnámrossa, and also supplies material for Belach Conglais, Mag Life and Mag Breg; Heldens., 653–6. The Egerton recension in turn borrows from the Dindshenchas (Rath Chruachan, Ráth Chnámrossa and perhaps Benn Étair II): Heldens., 658.

11. Cath Crinna. Source of Mag Finnabhrach.

12. Cath Maige Mucrime. From the version in LL 288 seq. Mag Mucrime is borrowed; see Stokes' edition in RC xiii, pp. 448–450. Cenn Febrat mentions the death of Dodera (ibid., p. 441).

13. Cath Maige Tuired. Dian Cécht's cures are referred to in Lusmag; cf. RC xii, 96.

14. De Chophur in dá Muccida. The contest between Rind and Faebur, as related in the Egerton version of the tale, supplies the subject of Luimnech (L.-Rev.). Thurneysen, Heldensage, 284, thinks that the Egerton text borrows from the Dindshenchas; if so, the latter in turn presupposes some earlier form of the tale. Áth Luain (Rev.-prose) refers to the tale, but calls it Echtra Nera, erroneously.

15. Derg-ruathar Chonaill Chernraig. Acall (L.-Rev.) refers to Conall Cernach as avenging Cú Chulainn's death. Temair III mentions Mál and Midna who appear in this tale.

16. Fled Bricrenn. According to Thurneysen, Heldensage,

464, 466, Fích mBuana derives from a passage interpolated into the LU-text, not earlier than the 11th century.

17. Gabáil in tSida. This form of the story of the Maeind Óc's trick is followed in Brug na Bóinde, ii, 25–36. In Tochmarc Étaine the trick is played on Elemar, not on the Dagda.

18. Genealogical Tracts. In Laud, 610 (see ZCP viii, 332), Rawl. B 502 (see ZCP xiv, 162), LL 331 b 48 and BB 163 d 37, the story of Tlachtga the daughter of Mog Ruith, the three sons of Simon Magus and the making of the roth rámach is told as in the ds. of Tlachtga (Ed. Rev.).

19. Mesca Ulad. Referred to in Luibnech. The LU version of the tale, which describes the storming of Temair Luachra, tells of the slaying of Crimthann Nia Náir, but does not mention his cétach, which suggests the etymology of Luibnech. Heldens., 474.

20. Lebor Gabála. On the use made of this source see § 4 below.

21. Noinden Ulad. Ard Macha makes use of the oldest of the extant versions (Thurneysen's "Fassung I"); Heldens., 360–363.

22. Orguin Dinn Ríg. Used for Laigin I and II. The last three stanzas of Inber nAilbine refer to Labraid and Moriath; see Stokes' edition of the tale in ZCP iii, 5–6.

23. Orguin Néill. The older version, edited by Meyer in Otia Merseiiana ii, 84 seq., is followed in Ochan. A later recension in BB 134 b 27 seq. quotes the Ds. poem.

24. Reicne Fothaid Canainne. The old poem edited by Meyer in Fianaigecht, pp. 10 seq., may have been used by the poet of Dún Crimthainn, though he drew the story of Crimthann from Lebor Gabála (see p. 5 above). Compare especially Dún Crimthainn 13–24 and 37–40 with st. 24–29 of Reicne Fothaid. Yet the latter refers directly to Crimthann's adventure (st. 26), so that the Ds. poet and the author of Reiene Fothaid may both have drawn on the lost Echtra Crimthainn Niad Náir, mentioned in the list of prím-scéla at LL 189 c 57.

25. Sanas Cormaic. This is one of the sources of Mag Femin, but probably through Lebor Gabála: see LL 9 b 33. The Rev. prose of Coire Breccán quotes directly from the Glossary.

26. Scél Baile meic Buain. Source of Alend (Rev.-prose).
27. Scél Muicce Meic Da Tho. Source of Mag Léna I and II.
28. Suidigud Tellaig Temra. On the use made of this story in the introduction to Bd.-Ed., see Hermathena, xlvi. 250. It is referred to also in Temair I, in Carmun 249, in Mag Mugna (and perhaps in Temair IV, 109).
29. Táin Bó Cuailnge. The fight of the two bulls forms the theme of Áth Luain (poem and Rev.-prose) and also of Mag Tarbga (L-prose), but with considerable variations; see Heldensage, 245-6. Áth nGabla tells of the four charioteers beheaded by CúChulainn. Dún macNechtain Scene refers briefly to the death of the sons of Nechta Seene. Gáirech refers to the wounding of CúChulainn and to his death. Sliab Callann mentions minor personages in the Táin. The poem on Carn Furbaide (32) alludes to the battle of Ilgáirech and the Rev.-prose refers to the Táin by name.
30. Táin Bó Dartada is referred to by name in Áth Cliath Medraige, but the explanation of the name of that place is taken from Táin Bo Regamain; see Heldensage, 308.
31. Táin Bó Fraích supplies the explanation of the name of Inber Biene (L Rev.-prose, Rev.-verse).
32. Talland Étair. The latter part of the poem Benn Étair II is based on this legend, but contains incidents not found in the extant versions of T. E. Áth Cliath Cualann (Rev.-prose) also refers to the story about Athirne; see Heldensage, 512. Loch Dergderc is founded on the beginning of T. E.
- 33, 34. Tecosc Cormaic and Tecosc Fíthail are mentioned in Carmun, 237.
35. Tochmarc Étaine. The first part is the source of Bóand I and II, of Brug na Bóinde II (1-36 and 93-6) and is referred to in Brug na Bóinde I, 21. It is also the source of the long poem at LL 208 b, which ought to be included in the Dindshenchas collection as Bóand III; see Heldensage, 605-8. Cnogba is also more distantly related to the legend: Heldensage, 603. The third part of T. Ét. supplies the framework of Ráth Esa and Ráth Chruachan.
36. Vita Tripartita. As to the relation of Mag Slecht to V. T. see § 4 (7). Sliab Fuait I, 49-56, refers to an incident found in V. T. 240. Findloch Cera is expanded from V. T. 114.

37. Vita Cerani. Source of part of Coire Breccáin.

38. Bruiden Átha. Source of Cenn Cuirrig.

To these may be added the following legends, now lost, which are mentioned, or which were probably utilised by the compilers of the prose recensions. Particulars as to the two extant lists of sagas (A and B) are given in Thurneysen's Heldensage, cap. 7.

39. Aithed Mná Ailella (A and B): referred to in prose of Carraic Lethderg.

40. Echtra Bressail: source of Rath Mór Maige Line, see prose.

41. Echtra Chrimthainn Niad Náir (A and B): probable source of Dún Crimthainn.

42. Longes Fothaid (A): perhaps source of Ard Fothaid.

43. Mirabilia Duorum Sinclororum: mentioned in prose as source of Áth Fadat II.

44. Orgain Ailig for Néit m. Induí (A and B): probably known to authors of Ailech II and III.

45. Orgain Echach fora Maccaib (A and B): no doubt source of Druim Criaich.

46. Tomaídum Locha Érne (A and B): presumably source of Loch Érne.

Most of the texts in this list are certainly older than the 11th century. In a few cases, though the only extant version is relatively late (e.g. Bruiden Da Choca, Derg-ruathar Chonaill chernaig), there is evidence that an earlier version existed, which was probably used by the compiler of the Dindshenchas. There remain two or three texts (e.g. Suidigud Tellaig Temra) which may perhaps have had their origin as late as the 11th century, but as their dates are quite undetermined they afford no help in regard to the Dindshenchas.

The only text on the list to which a precise date has been assigned is Lebor Gabála, the relations of which to the Dindshenchas must now be considered.

§ 4. The evolution of Lebor Gabála and the relations between the different extant versions have been studied by Van Hamel in a long article in ZCP x, 97–197; more briefly by Thurneysen in his Zu irischen Handschriften, zweite Serie, 1–9. See also Thurneysen's criticisms of Van Hamel's article in ZCP x, 384–395 (partly modified, ibid., xii, 283). The questions raised by these two scholars can hardly be regarded as finally settled; it is to be hoped that the edition of the different texts of LG, promised by Dr. R. A. S. Macalister, will bring us nearer to a working hypothesis. I am only concerned with borrowings by the compilers of the Dindshenchas from LG, and with such inferences as may be drawn from them as to the date of both compilations.

It is certain that the LG texts which we possess are the result of a gradual process of development and accretion; we have, therefore, to keep in mind the probability that the different authors of poems included in the Dindshenchas and the successive editors of the prose versions made use of different recensions of LG. For example, the poem Brug na Bóinde I, 13, mentions Scota, wife of Míl, and this poem is attributed to Cinaed O Hartacáin (†975), and is therefore probably earlier than any of the extant LG texts.

For my purpose, the most important of these is the version which occupies the first 26 pages of the Book of Leinster (Thurneysen's A-recension). I shall only quote instances in which the Dindshenchas is so closely related to LG that one has clearly borrowed from the other, disregarding slighter references to persons or incidents common to the two. It so happens that there is no instance of such close relation between the L-Dindshenchas and LG; I shall therefore put first articles belonging to the Bd.-Ed. recension, adding afterwards instances taken from articles in the Rev.-prose, some of which may have been included in the L-prose in its complete state.

I treat the tractate Do Flaithiusaib Érenn as an integral part of LG.

1. Loch Érne. Ed. 56 (second paragraph, Stokes's text):—

(a) NÓ ba ferann do Érnaib fecht n-aile go robris Fiacho Labrainne mac Senbotha meic Tighernmais cath forro go rosdilgend (-dligéandh, MS.) conidh iarsin do mebhaidh in loch fo tir nÉrenn.

(Rev. 80 is shorter.)

This is based on the poem (Metr. Ds. iii, 460-2, ll. 21-41) :

Cethri tomadmann . . . maidm Flesce oeus (sic leg.) fir-Mainne, Tomaidm Labrandi . . . maidm locha Érne . . . Cethri catha re Fiachaig . . . eo cath Sléibe Belgadain; Cath Fairge . . . cath Sléibe Femin . . . cath garg Gatlaig . . . cethramad cath for Érnaib . . . suail na rusdilgenn Fiachu . . . Andsin romemaid in loch.

(b) LL 17 b. 43.

Gabais Fiachu Labrainne mac Smirguill mac (S)enboth mac Tigernmais ríge nÉrenn. Is 'na aimsir tomaidm Flesce 7 Mane 7 Labrainne. Fích cath for Fairge fri claind Ebir. Dorochair Fiachu Labrainne i cath Sléibe Belgadain.

The use of the old preterite fích, which occurs in early texts such as Mesca Ulad (LU 1542), Compert Mongáin (LU 10927) and another Mongan-story (LU 10986), indicates that LG is here drawing on some early source; whereas rusdilgenn, which the Ed.-prose borrows from the verse, is a late form. The Dindshenchas therefore derives from LG. Note however that LG mentions only four battles, omitting the battle of Sliab Femin. The version in Rawl. 83 v° a 2 mentions this battle, but omits the cath for Érnaib. (This is part of Thurneysen's B I-text, which is according to him a rehandling of the L-text). Did the "original text" enumerate all five battles (including Cath Sleibe Belgadain)? Or were the battle of Sliab Femin and the battle against the Érainn one and the same, and did the Ds. compiler blunder in counting them as distinct battles?

2. Sliab Beta.

(b) LL 4 b 26. Incipit de Gabálaib Hérend.

Rosgab iarum Cessair ingen Betha meic NÓe, ut poeta dixit, cethracha laa ria ndílinn. Is é foehond a tiachtana, ar teched na dílend. The words ut poeta dixit point to the source of (b), namely, the poems at LL 4 b 4, 4 b 41, and 5 b 14. The reference to Noah, however, comes from some other authority.

The first half of (a) is clearly borrowed from (b). In the second half there is a divergence; in (a) the Flood drowns all four leaders impartially; in (b) two ships are overwhelmed, the third escapes, and we are not told how the four leaders got their deaths. Further, the last sentence of (a), as printed by Stokes, presents several difficulties. He translates "(Each) was for a whole year beneath the waves and then the sea gave them up again, but as to the ship wherein they had arrived the sea dashed it on a rock," etc. But the singular robí and the change of number to tudchadar are unaccountable; moreover, ronathnai has a singular infix, not a plural.

The explanation is, I think, that the compiler of Ed. was drawing partly on the prose of LG, partly on the poem at LL 4 b 4, which, it is to be noted, is ascribed to Fintan. Stanzas 3 and 4 run thus:—

Tarraid díliu Bith ina Sléib cen rúin,
Ladru i nArd Ladrand, Cessair in a Cúil.

Bliadain dam fo dílind déin i Taul Tuinne thend;
Ni fuarus ní im thomaltus eotlud bad ferr.

The subject to robí in (a) is Fintan, and if we read tudcha(i)d arisi instead of tudchadar isi all difficulties disappear. “Fintan was a year beneath the waves, and then the sea gave him up again and the ship in which he came likewise,” etc.

Rev.’s version (Rev. Celt. xvi. 154) tells the story rather differently, but refers explicitly to Capturae Hiberniae (= Gabála hÉrenn) as its authority. The forms doriuimenadar and ronathnai in (a) are noteworthy; the latter comes from adnoaim, v.n. aithne “deposit”; see Pedersen 788 and cf. Meyer’s Contrib. adnuu (?), atnuu; ACL iii. 18, § 39, roaithne (gl. rotimain).

The story of Bith and Cessair is not found in either of the texts of version B III (Rawl. and Lec. I); consequently, if Thurneysen’s theory is right, it did not form part of the “original” LG.

3. Mag nItha.

I put first the story in LG.

This is clearly a condensed version of (a).

The prose of Rev. is also taken, independently, from LG.

Sé ectrhair sin, calma in cuing, rodosmarbtha la Drecuinn.

I have not found this quatrain, nor any mention of Nemthenn, in any text of LG, yet Capturae Hiberniae must mean some version of LG, as it does in the Rev. dindshenchas of Sliab Betha.

L and Rev. do not mention the Capturae, although L quotes the quatrain.

I proceed to give further examples of borrowing from LG taken from the Revised text. In these cases there is no prose equivalent in L or Bd.-Ed.

5. Ard Lemnacht.

(a) Rev. Celt. xv. 427.

In this instance, the (a)-version seems to be older than (b). For (i) doruaicill, tomlachtaiter, atré in (a) are old forms (so BB. 370 a 43; R has doruaichill, wrongly).

(ii) (a)'s ní gabtis renna no faebra friu is right (cf. the metrical version, Metr. Ds. iii. 164, 10, nísgaibed urgail armgrith), whereas (b)'s nísgaibtis acht iarna nemide shows a misunderstanding; it was the Fidgai who used poisoned weapons, not the Cruithníg. It may be noted that the version of the story in Lebor Bretnach (Van Hamel's ed., p. 8) is found only in two late texts, and seems to be derived from the late recension of LG in Lec. 286 b = BB 43 a 41 seq. (Thurneysen's C version).

6. Dún Crimthainn.

(a) Rev. Celt. xv. 332.

Dún conrótacht la Crimthann mae Luigdech i mBend Étair, qui et Nia fer Náire (Nia Naire, with i. fear super-script, B) dicebatur; tredecim annos regnavit. Is é docuaid i n-echtra a Dún Cremthainn (nó a Dáil Uisnigh, ut ipse dixit) la Náir tuaidh in ban-sídhe, coma-fcē caéteighis ar mí and, dia tubairt na séotu imdai, imon carput n-óir 7 imon fidchill n-óir 7 imon cétaigh Crimthainn (i. lend sainemail) 7 aroile séotu imda olchena; 7 atbath iarsain a haithle a echtra i mmaig Étair, 7 roadnacht ina dún.

Here (b)'s carpat n-órda seems original, not (a)'s carput n-óir. On the other hand (b) does not account for the Latin clause qui et N.N. dicebatur: tredecim annos regnavit, nor for the old form conrótacht in (a). The variant nó a Dáil Uisnigh, ut ipse dixit, comes from the Ds. poem, which is put in the mouth of Crimthann himself: see Metr. Ds. iii, 120, 2.

In spite of certain differences, the first part of (a) is probably drawn from some text of (c). The second part seems to be indebted to (b); from which comes also (a)'s rig-ídal and Crom Croich.

§ 5. The evidence that has been adduced under § 4, 1-4
(especially under 2), proves that the compiler of the First Recension of the Dindshenchas borrowed some of his material from Lebor Gabála—to be more precise, from that form of LG which is represented by LL and its derivatives; for the episode of Bith and Cessair, to which the ds. of Sliaib Betha belongs, does not appear in the other main branch of the LG tradition. If we could accept Thurneysen's dating of LG this fact would enable us to determine the date of the Dindshenchas within a very few years.

Thurneysen infers from the entry at the end of the “B III” version in Rawl. 512 (f. 97) “Ruaidri .ii. x.” that this version was compiled in the twelfth year of Ruaidrí, son of Toirrdelbach ua Conchobair; by which may be meant the year 1168, if we reckon from the death of Toirrdelbach, or 1178, if we reckon from Ruaidrí's recognition as Ard-Rí (Zu ir. Hds. II. p. 7). This inference I accept as highly probable.
He goes on to remark that the corresponding list of kings at the end of the LL copy ends with “Ruadri macc Tairdelbaig hua Conchobair,” followed by nine entries of which the last records Ruaidrí's death; and, further, that the BB copy also ends with a notice of Ruaidrí; and he argues that this agreement among these different versions proves that the “original form” of LG was composed in the reign of Ruaidrí (not however necessarily in the 12th year of his reign; cf. Heldensage, p. 35, ad calc.).

This would be a result of great importance if it were securely established; it would supply us with one of those fixed points in the chronology of documents which are so useful for the historian of Irish literature. Unfortunately I cannot think that Thurneysen’s argument is convincing. It ignores several important considerations.

1. The list of High Kings in Rawl. 512, f. 97, is a bare list of names, whereas the list in LL adds short notices of each king.

2. These two lists adopt different views as to the High Kingship in the 12th century. In Rawl. the last three kings are Muircertach ua Briáin, Toirrdelbach ua Conchobair, Ruaidrí ua Conchobair. The compiler (who was probably a Munsterman) regards Ruaidrí as succeeding to the High Kingship on the death of his father in 1156. In the view of the LL compiler, Toirrdelbach was only rí co fressabra (as we should say, de jure but not de facto); and he was not immediately succeeded by his son Ruaidrí but by Muireertach mae Néill (ua Lochlainn), who reigned 14 years co torchair la hUi Briuin 7 la Airgialla. It was only after his death that Ruaidrí became High King.

These two lists are therefore quite independent, and there is no presumption that either of them represents the original text of LG.

3. The Annals of Ulster confirm the view taken by the LL compiler. Under the years 1157, 1162, 1164, and 1166 Muircertach ua Lochlainn is expressly described as High King. His death in battle against Airgialla, Ui Briuin, and Conmaiene is recorded under 1166. In the same year Ruaidrí ua Conchobair was “made king” (rorígad) by “the kings of all Leth Moga”; though he is not described as King of Ireland until 1169 (A.U.).

4. The only point in common between the lists in LL and Rawl. is that both end with Ruaidrí. But this proves nothing as to the date of the original text. Supposing that it contained a list of High Kings—whether a mere list of names as in Rawl. or a series of brief notices as in LL—nothing could be more natural than that successive scribes should bring the list down to their own date, so long as the succession of High Kings was maintained. This is the ordinary annalistic procedure.

5. The entry in LL regarding Muireertach mac Néill (ua Lochlainn) and the first line of the notice of Ruaidrí ua Conchobair must have been made after 1166, the year of Muireertach's defeat and death; the last 8 lines, about Diarmait mac Murchada and the Norman invasion, were added later; see Lueius Gwynn's article in Ériu VIII, 114.

6. Ruaidrí was the last of the High Kings, as is recognised e.g. by Keating, who ends his work with the Norman Invasion. That event cut short Ruaidrí's High Kingship and finally broke up the political structure of Ireland. In all copies of LG written later than 1170 (for instance, Rawl. and BB) the list of High Kings ends with Ruaidrí, simply because there were no more names to be added. There is here no ground for dating the composition of the original LG to the time of Ruaidrí.

7. If we were to accept Thurneysen's view, we should have to choose as a date either 1168, the year indicated by the entry "Ruaidri. ii. x." in Rawl. or else a year between 1166 and 1170, indicated by the notices in LL and AU. Neither date is really compatible with what we know of the compilation of LL.

The marginal reference on p. 49 of LL to the death of Domnall ua Conchobair of Ui Failge as occurring "yesterday" shows that this leaf was written in 1161; and the note on p. 288 addressed to Bishop Finn mac Gormain proves that this leaf was written not later than 1160 (Atkinson, Contents of LL, pp. 7-8). It is, therefore, reasonable to suppose that the Dindshenechas, which occupies pp. 151-170 and 191-216, was written about the same time; if so, the compiler could not have made use of a document which was first put together half a dozen years later. The same difficulty arises about the date of the LL copy of Lebor Gabála. In the latter case Thurneysen suggests that this part of LL may have been written later than the rest, although it now stands first, and this supposition may be thought to receive some support from the proof given above that part of the last column of the text must have been written after 1166. There is, however, nothing to warrant a similar supposition in the case of the Dindshenchas. And, even if we make such assumptions as to these two sections of LL, we have only put the difficulty further back. For neither of them is a first draft; they both presuppose an earlier original, and in each case it seems only reasonable to allow a certain interval of time between this and the writing of LL. If the original LG was composed in 1166 or 1168, it is difficult to believe that a revised and altered edition (such as Thurneysen supposes the LL-text to be) could be prepared before LL was completed. It is still less credible that in the same interval the archetypal Dindshenchas, which borrowed from LG, could be compiled and that a copy thereof could find its way into LL: especially as this copy was already seriously corrupted and as the scribe found his exemplar in at least one passage already illegible (see Hermathena, xlvi. 240).

§ 6. These arguments may be reinforced by the evidence of Gillananaem O'Duinn's poem, which is discussed in VIII above. It seems to be based on some form of the First Recension of the prose, probably on a MS. of the Bd.-Ed. type. If this be so, it follows that the Bd.-Ed. recension is older than 1166, the date of O'Duinn's poem, and that the earliest form of the First Recension was older still. Therefore Lebor Gabála, being one source of the Bd.-Ed. text, cannot have been compiled so late as 1168.

§ 7. For all these reasons I find myself unable to accept the view that the original LG is to be dated to the reign of Ruaidrí. I hold it to have been much older, and I believe that the Dindshenchas borrowings go back to a text much earlier in date than LL. This would help to explain why these borrowed passages exhibit a certain number of old grammatical forms which are not found in the corresponding passages in LL's copy of LG. Attention has been called, in passing, to the old deponent preterite doruimenatar in Sliab Beta, to doruaicill, tomlachtaiter in Ard Lemnacht, and to conrótacht in Dun Crimthainn. These are forms which one would not expect to meet in a document composed in the last half of the 12th century; but I shall return presently to the question of linguistic criteria.

We may also explain in the same way why it is that in Dún Crimthainn the Dindshenchas text seems in one or two points nearer the original than that of the LL-Lebor Gabála. In (6) the clause tredecim annos regnavit must have come from some text of an annalistic nature, as it is quite irrelevant to the Dindshenchas story. I suggest that it is copied from an early text of LG in which it was part of the notice of Crimthann.

§ 8. So far, all that we have succeeded in establishing is that the L-Dindshenchas must have been put together not earlier than the middle of the 11th century; and it has been suggested that the year 1079 may serve as a terminus a quo. We must now turn to another line of inquiry.

The prose-text of the L-Ds., being composed, as I assume, at one time is naturally much more homogeneous than the verse, and we may apply to it such grammatical tests as are available for dating. Leaving out of account the quatrains appended to the several prose articles, the results of an examination of the prose of L as to the use of the infixes and independent pronouns are as follows:—

Infixed forms:

LL 159 b 47, co ronloise . . . 7 eo ronlá a luath lasin sruth . . . eo romberb. 160 a 5, corambruimned; 42, corosmarb. 160 b 6, conosfargaib; 16, corosmarbsat; 26, eo rosbáid.

165 a 11, conosface[a]. 165 b 32, corombriss; 35, corosmarb; 40, dosnuesat; 44, cotanbruiset. 166 a 27, rosdelb. 166 b 26, eo roserb; 32, eo rosarb. 167 a 6, condasfuair; 36, rosimar[t]. 168 b 38, rombíath. 169 a 7, rosnuc . . . 7 dosfuaid; 16, condaralsat é; 28, fosfothraicet; 46, rostend; 52, immusnerbaigset. 169 b 47, romberr. 170 a 9, nosfothraiced; 29, rosdolbsetar. 193 a 24, musraind. 193 b 20, ronimber. 200 a 31, nistarfaid; 36, condostacht a hanál 7 conapad de, 7 ronadnacht aimr i nadnsnat (?) bás; 60, nodosgair. 200 b 4, conostarraid. 216 b 5, conastueside; 8, rodosmarb.

As to these instances is to be remarked :

(1) Some are otiose : 159 b 47, co ronla . . . co romberb; 160 a 5, co rambruinned (unless this is reflexive); 200 a 31, ronadnacht.

(2) -dos-, -das-, -os, are used instead of the older d-forms : conosfargaib, conosfacca, condasfuair, condostacht, conostarraid, conastuc, rodosmarb, nodosgair.

Such forms are already fairly frequent in Saltair na Rann : Strachan has noted 54 (Eriu i. 174).

(3) -da- is used as masc. sg. (condaralsat é, 169 a 16). Strachan quotes 6 examples from SnR (ibid.).

(4) -s- for -sn- : roserb, 166 b 26; rosimart, 167 a 36; as masc. sg., rosmarb, 165 b 35. Cf. Strachan, ut sup. 165.

(5) -n- for -an- : ronloise, rombriss, rombiath (as fem.?), romberr, ronimber. Cf. Strachan, ut sup. 157, 165.

The following instances of the use of the independent pronoun instead of the infix occur :—

(a) as subject to the verb :

159 a 4, is and rohadnacht lí; 159 b 13, dogní sí; 160 b 23, romarbad é; 193 b 24, forrgither andsin é.

(b) as object :

159 b 35, coroselaig é; 160 b 23, corocarsat a chethri é; 165 b 20, fuair a ingen marb é; 169 a 16, conduatar na biasta é, condaralsat é 'na ágib; 200 a 48, roadnacht F. iat; 216 b 3, tue E. íside.

(c) as subject to the copula :

159 a 42, ba díbergach é; 160 b 44, ba marb é; 193 b 7, ba fili é; 199 b y, Eo Rossa ibar é; 200 b 2, ua Echach . . . é.

In all, 16 instances, as against 37 instances of the infixd pronoun (or 38, if adnsnat in 200 a 36 contains an infix in disguise).

Thus the infixd pronouns are more than twice as numerous as the independent. According to O'Catháin (who has collected instances found in the Annals of Ulster) (ZCP xix. 6) the ratio between the years 1057 and 1155 is 7 infixd to 3 independent: while for the period 1156–1200 it is as 3 : 13. In the LL-Táin, which Thurneysen assigns to the first quarter of the 11th century (Heldensage, 668), Dillon's collections "show a proportion of more than 2 : 1 in favour of the infix'd pronoun" (ZCP xvi. 330). As the material in the Annals is very scanty, and the date of the Táin is conjectural, these indications must be taken with caution, but so far as one can trust them they would lead one to put the Dindshenchas about as early as the LL-Táin.

Another test which may be applied is the substitution of singular forms of the copula for the plural. In the introduction to his Duanaire Finn, vol. iii,¹¹ G. E. Murphy has investigated this point, and arrived at the following conclusions :—

- (i) Up to 1100 the substitution is very rare.
- (ii) By 1150 the ratio of inflected to non-inflected forms is about 5 to 1.
- (iii) By 1200 the ratio has become about 1 to 3.

I have found in the Dindshenchas (L-prose) 6 cases of inflection and only 1 of non-inflection. The instances are these :

(a) Inflected :

LL 160 b 13, batar formtig. 167 b 31, batar lána. 168 b 12, roptar é trí mó'r-thuile hÉrenn. 169 a 20, combdar dub-odra. 170 a 41, bat corera uli. 200 a 21, nídat enof ruiss.

(b) Non-inflected :

170 b 40, is iat gegna Cú Chulainn.

The figures thus correspond to Murphy's ratio for 1150, but the cases are too few to offer reliable guidance. At all events the single case of substitution of the singular copula need not prevent us from accepting provisionally a date between 1100 and 1125 for the L-prose.

We cannot with equal confidence make use of such grammatical tests to determine the date of the Second Recension. Its prose text often reproduces that of L, with more or less variation, while in other instances it is completely rewritten; besides, its phrasing is borrowed from the verse to a much greater extent than that of L's prose. The language is consequently not homogeneous.

A terminus a quo is however given by a reference in the prose of Tonn Chlidna to Acallam na Senórach. The Acallam mentions the Monastery of Drogheda, founded by Donnchad mac Cerbaill in the year 1142, and was therefore composed after that date: see Stokes' note on line 53 of his edition (Irische Texte iv. 273). Consequently the Second Recension of the Dindshenchas must be dated still later.

The same reference is found also in the Edinburgh Dindshenchas in almost exactly the same words as in manuscripts of the Second Recension: Agus fós amhail rochan Cailte aran dind cetna i n-aimsir Padraig aran Agallaim doronsat ar [D]indsenchas Erenn. But in the Second Recension this paragraph follows immediately after the first poem on Tonn Chlidna, and serves to introduce the second: whereas Ed. omits the first poem, so that the words Agus fós lose their meaning. Besides, Bd. has neither the paragraph in question nor the poem which it introduces, so that we must regard these as borrowed by Ed. from the Second Recension.

We have seen in VIII, § 3, that the Bd.-Ed. type of text was probably in existence before 1166, the date of O'Duinn's poem: but we have no definite anterior limit of date. We must however allow a considerable interval between this and the earlier form of the First Recension. As was observed above (p. 28 (ii)), the text of Bd.-Ed. shows a process of accretion at work, gradually enlarging the original framework. In particular, as Thurneysen remarks, a title and an introduction to the whole work have been supplied. These developments were carried further in the Second Recension. For it we can fix no definite posterior limit. Thurneysen, for reasons of his own, suggests "somewhere about the year 1200."

We may tentatively assign as approximate dates—for the First Recension of the prose text, the first quarter of the 12th century;
for the Bd.-Ed. text, the second quarter;
for the first draft of the Revised text, the last quarter.

ADDENDA.

AMONG the miscellaneous matter appended to the Dindshenchas in M occur the two poems which follow. I know of no other copies. The second is very illegible, the vellum being much stained, but with the help of photographs taken under ultra-violet light by Professor R. W. Ditchburn I have succeeded in deciphering most of the text.

OENACH UCHBAD.

1. A caithir naem, comall ngle,

5. An sliab adeiu allaneas, aball-gort Duib meic Deagad.

1. O home of saints, famous assembly, that standest by the marge of Dorn Buide! thou wast once a home of hundreds and of hosts, visited by doughty deeds and fierce troops.

2. Great was the array that visited it, the wizard folk that dwelt among the men of Erin,—Abartach, Ilbreac maker of rhymes, and Doirenn, great was the brotherhood.

3. That meeting-place, the meeting-place of Sanb . . . the royal spot: by the ford of fighting men, truth I tell, its name was Aenach Uehbad.
4. That ford was Ath Salach of old, that is also called Ath Cuitech; Ath Catach was its name when Dub son of Rogarb fell.
5. The mountain I see to the southward, where no foreign force found place, was called among the multitude Caill Abla, the orchard of Dub mac Dedad.

NOTES.

As Oenach Uehbad was 'by the marge of Dorn Buide' it cannot have been far from Tonn Clidna, which lay 'southeast of Síd Duirn Buide'; see pt. iii, 208, 28. Cf. Silva Gadelica i. 223, 23. O'Rahilly has shown (Hermathena xlvi, 201) that Tonn Clidna was somewhere near Galley Head in S.W. Cork. Ath Salach is presumably to be sought in the same neighbourhood, and is not the ford of that name which Ciarán of Clonmaenoise crossed on his way home from Saighir Chiaráin, near Birr (Silv. Gad. ii. 15). Hogan is mistaken in saying that this ford was the scene of a battle between Clann Nemid and the Fomorians (Onom. s.v. Ath Catach, Ath Cuitech): he took our poem to be part of the ds. of Lége which immediately precedes it.

Oenach Uehbad was evidently a meeting-place of the aes side, to whom Ilbrec certainly belongs; he is no doubt Ilbrec of Ess Ruaid, who appears in Acallam na Senórach. Doirenn may be either the daughter of Midir or the daughter of Bedb Derg, both of whom we meet in the Acallam. Dorn Buide must be another chieftain of the fairy people: we find mention in the Féilire (first ed. p. xlvi) of a hill and a ford in Ossory called after him.

In st. 2, we should perhaps read dolb-chomaithech (g. pl.).

Lines 27–30 refer to a story told in the life of Brendan of Clonfert: see Stokes' Lives of the Saints from the Book of Lismore, p. 104. Our text shows that Stokes was right in supposing that guala can mean the shaft of a chariot. In 30, farbairt seems = forbairt: Dinneen quotes the phrase cad é an fhorbairt atá ort annsain 'what are you rooting for?'

CORRIGENDA.

CORRECTIONS suggested by K. Meyer in a private letter are marked with his initials. See also his corrections to Part II in Z.C.P. vi. 245. See further the list of Corrigenda on pp. ix, x of Part III, as well as many other corrections in the Notes.

PART I.

- p.
 2, 14, read a Chú Alad.
 3, 3, read 'when did it separate from the country-side?' (K.M.).
 3, 7, for 'stark' read 'fresh'.
 5, 44, for 'even' read 'over' (K.M.).
 6, 16, read addoimed: see Glossary, addamim.
 8, 29, read clethi (part. necess.) (K.M.).
 9, 28, for 'who would dare' read 'whence she executed'.
 9, 40, for 'bore her away' read 'wedded her,' and so in 45.
 9, 47, read 'that the loan of her might be returned' (literally 'that there should be restitution of her from her loan').
 10, 57, read bár: See Meyer, Bruchstücke, 19, note.
 11, 51, read 'the grey-eyed pasturing host'.
 14, 23, read crichad, 'delimitation'.
 15, 2, read 'of the furrows'.
 22, 113, read Rostarraid.
 24, 155, read loisceet.
 25, 164, tr. 'this was their proper due . . . a fist' (K.M.).
 26, 170, read cuisleóir is cerd immaroen.
 26, 172, read domeiltis.
 26, 178, read drúthaib, 'jesters' (K.M.) (though most texts have draithib).
 27, 170-1, tr. 'the flute-player and rhymester both, the horn-blower, the piper'.
 27, 179, tr. 'the uruscla belonged without question to the maidens': see Glossary.
 28, 19, read tareai, 'overlooks'.
 29, 17, read 'protects it'.
 30, 35, read rubac = robec (K.M.).
 30, 41, read ri ós Rinne, 'King over Erin'; see Index of Place-Names.
 31, 28, tr. 'she was the goal of the world's road'.
 31, 31, for 'distinctions' read 'the choicest' (K.M.).
 31, 35, tr. 'it was not too small for separation'; cf. p. 3, 3, above.
 32, 53, read cennach condail, 'an honest reckoning'.
 34, 87, read ac oil.

- p.
 34, 79–80, read tolach, rogach.
 34, 88, read ar obbad doäd dossam, ‘to ward off mischances for him’.
 35, 69–72, read ‘Their liquor, going round in state, did 300 cupbearers dispense to the fiery princes and noblemen: none of the number was neglected’.
 35, 74, read ‘their abundance was a case of choice,’ i.e., ‘there was plenty to choose from’.
 35, 78–80, read ‘never stopping for delay, to serve the food of the wide-reaching (or, broad-handed) kings and princes,—a pleasing employment’.
 35, 82, for ‘lordly’ read ‘well-guarded’.
 37, 109, read ‘was a-searching’.
 37, 111–112, read ‘has any progeny like Cormac enjoyed the world?’ (K.M.).
 44, 69, read beit.
 46, 1 and 20, read araicci, ‘which confronts’.
 46, 21, read haicde.
 47, 7, read ‘which fills the stanza’.
 48, 49, read guidmi (guidme, L.): the poem is by Cinaed ua Hartacain, †975.
 49, 39, read ‘who adorn stanzas’.
 51, 56, read ‘while he goes’.
 75. Temair V. This string of names seems to be compiled from several sources; see notes on 5–12, 17–20, 37–40; and note that the names in 9–12 are all (except Mag Breg) taken from a quatrain appended to prose ds. of Cerna, LL 168a. Hence the repetition of Crinna (12, 31), Aigle (16), and Cruach Aigle (31), Cuillenn (3, 12), and Raigne (2, 18). Mag Breg is also repeated (10, 45).

PART II.

- 2, 9, read Midir dalta, ‘Midir’s fosterling’ (Heldens. 618n.).
 2, 22, read lotar.
 2, 24, and 5, 46, for ‘bright’ read ‘full-strong’.
 4, 27, read ocond folaim-sin ‘at this forcible entry’ for folaimm (foilim) ‘legal pursuit, enforcement of a claim’. See Eriu x. 125; Hermath. xlvi. 7.
 4, 43, read ba dál amnas uachalla, ‘it was a subtle . . . affair’.
 4, 44, read roselt (L).
 5, 32, for ‘slaughtering’ read ‘lance-bearing’.
 5, 40, for ‘meeting’ read ‘bargain’.
 6, 57, read tóchar.
 6, 60, read Tethba.
 6, 61, read domingair-se.
 6, 67, read asa saílfed-si, ‘whence she would keep watch’.

P.

- 8, 82, R. Th. (Heldens. 618n.) would read immo les ndian co ndernta, and render: 'Midir prayed Sigmall, in regard to his sudden request, that it should be fulfilled'.
- 10, 16, read perhaps ní gann in gnod, 'not sparing the graving-tool': gnod = rinn, Metr. Gl.; cf. O'Mule. 671.
- 11, 8, for 'islands' read 'milking-places'.
- 11, 11, for 'in sooth' read 'readily'.
- 12, 27, read is é a chnáim, 'it was his bone that polluted the sea'.
- 12, 32, read nemid, 'sanctuary'.
- 12, 34, read romaidé, 'was boasted' (K.M.).
- 12, 35, read dorind.
- 12, 36, read for féin (K.M.).
- 13, 33, for 'Trench' read 'Grave'.
- 13, 35-6, read 'great the feat of pride that assigns the slaying of Finn to the soldiery of the fierce Luagni'.
- 13, 39, read 'it was one able to sustain a household that ruled thee'.
- 14, 51, read perhaps nídat écruthaeh hit tir, 'thou art not unlovely in thy land'. K.M. suggests écrodach, 'scant of stock'.
- 14, 63, read din.
- 16, 75, read ná dernsat, 'who did not perform'.
- 16, 82, read Mana . . . Séil, 'The Mana and wholesome Seil pass by thee' (two rivers).
- 17, 85-6, read 'Congalach the illustrious lord of warriors, swift is his blow, noble (?) his assembly'. This is perhaps Congalach, lord of the Gailenga, +978 (F.M.).
- 17, 87, for 'with a track' read 'as far as the sea'.
- 18, 19, read díad (:cian, 20).
- 20, 30. The MSS. have bregad (etc.) not brégrad; the meaning is doubtful. of the rhyme
- 20, 35, read Ochun (:other).
- 20, 44, read fiad-glonn, 'honoured deed'.
- 20, 48, read báeth-bla báeth, 'idle clamour of fools'.
- 21, 28, read 'it was a fitting command'.
- 21, 37, for 'trench' read 'grave'.
- 21, 38, for 'questions' read 'lots' (Dinneen).
- 21, 46, 'with wailing in unison, filling the breezes'.
- 22, 50, read galma gráin, 'shame of avarice'.
- 22, 55, read méraid.
- 22, 59, read fuirglid, is iath, etc.: 'bear witness, it is the meadow-land of a rough race'. This mends the grammar, and gives a rhyme to Lurgnig.
- 23, 53, for 'Coral' read 'Casket': see Glossary.
- 23, 66, for 'true-clear learning' read 'theme of song truly-bright'.
- 24, 81, read lotar.
- 24, 84, read Leicc (: gleicc).
- 25, 74, for 'on account of him' read 'towards him'.
- 25, 95. This incident is narrated in the Second Part of Tochmair Etaine (not yet published).

- p.
 26, 4, read perhaps n-áith-glec (g. pl. 'sharp contests') with ráidfet in 3.
 26, 9–10, read raith-roga, 'a happy choice' (?) and maith-mora, 'of the goodly sea'.
 27, 5, for 'famed for travel' read 'far-famed' (or 'far-shouting').
 27, 10, read 'of the morn-slumbering sea'.
 27, 15, for 'the deeper dole' read 'thence (came) cause of grief'.
 28, 21, read mosláí.
 28, 22, read fairge dar sál.
 28, 23, read in sain-delgna (deleting comma). This seems to be an epithet for Ruad: perhaps = 'the princely spear-head'.
 28, 24, dlúth-chóema will not do; possibly bith-chóema, written perhaps biuth-choema, to make a rhyme. Cf. Th. Gram. § 307. But the readings indicate early corruption in this stanza and the next.
 28, 26, read ba heát fodrergatar 'it was they who had arrested him': see Helden. 395.
 29, 38–39, read perhaps 'he went from them on no unlucky course—it was a leave misused'; see Glossary, císal and malart.
 29, 43, read perhaps ('he was a good fosterling of a good family'), deleting semi-colon in 42: see Glossary, soalt and sochlaind.
 30, 65, delete comma after curchán (K.M.).
 32, 87, read ráitir, 'it is called'; (raiddir, B.).
 32, 91, read buil-iath, 'the blooming land' (?); cf. builid.
 33, 78, read 'fierce wide-ruling Ruad'. See Glossary, rige.
 34, 94. The MS. readings point to tadclaid, 'claims' (?); cf. adclaidim. The passage is obscure and probably corrupt, but perhaps we may read tadclaid túath toimsech tlacht-balc fí feib ful-iath fer co facth, 'the man of evil, poisonous as a field of blood, claims the rental of the strong-clad communities.' See Glossary, toimsech and facth. Labraid killed Cobthach cáel and burned Dinn Rig: see Z.C.P. III. 1–14.
 34, 98, read rottriallad and render 'when the attempt was made (or, when she was attacked) she was no coward.'
 36, 2, read lettir, 'hill-side'. As ferta means 'grave' it could hardly be said to be ás lecht fir.
 36, 10, read Ail dán décsin (for décsiu).
 36, 16, read sáidis.
 37, 1, read 'the grave of martial Niall'.
 37, 7, read 'he extended'.
 38, 25, read Fírían focul.
 38, 33, read Lotar.
 38, 40, read Fir Lí is Luirg, 'the Fir Lí and Fir Luirg'; see Onom.
 38, 43, read perhaps nassad nin (rhyming with dil), 'assembly of waves', i.e. 'whose hosting was on the sea'.
 38, 47, read dobértar, 'shall be brought'.

P.

- 40, 65, read glan a gné, 'bright his form'.
- 41, 51, read 'Enna, who was the rallying-point of the host'.
- 41, 66, for 'glory' read 'assembly'.
- 42, 14, read tren-assad (= -os-sad).
- 43, 7, for 'hero' read 'honour'.
- 43, 19, read 'that he (Mide and his descendants) has a right by a perpetual bargain in return for it (the fire)'.
- 44, 36, read ''s a phrim-senchaid', 'and his chief shanachie'.
- 44, 47, read in suíde snas, 'polished learning' (K.M.), but I have not found snass as adj. Perhaps na suithe snass, 'the polished style of sages'.
- 44, 48, read (with most MSS.) is é sin.
- 44, 51, read dia d'iráil a gréssa glé, 'enough commendation of his clear art'.
- 46, 3, read atchim, 'I see' (: thir).
- 46, 7, read baird (: aird).
- 46, 19, perhaps is Domnann dirim (so most MSS.), 'and the multitude of Domnainn'.
- 46, 20, read i ngád-méin, 'in their mood of distress'.
- 47, 2, read 'for many a day it increased the household,' i.e. it was long a populous place; see Glossary, tuillim.
- 47, 7, read 'that will be profitable with its goodly share' (i.e. 'fee for song').
- 47, 18, read 'were not soon tamed of their free will' (or, 'at his absolute command').
- 48, 25, read fuillid, 'add (his name)'.
- 48, 36, read aidble ind idail, '(such was the) might of the idolator.'
- Tuathal encouraged druidical worship; see I.T.S. VIII, 246.
- 49, 34, read 'above princes'.
- 49, 39, read 'good in truth is the day'.
- 50, 9, read is é.
- 50, 20, 21 and 22, read laignib, Laigne; L however has lagnib (21) and Laigne.
- 51, 19, read 'in a muster'.
- 52, 3, 10 and 11, read laignech, laignib; L however has lágnech, lágrib.
- 55, 23, read 'their increase is not far from the cattle' (crad = crod).
- 56, 26, read ruiseda; see Glossary.
- 58, 2, read flescach.
- 59, 6, read 'against dripping'.
- 60, 1, read lór.
- 61, 7, read 'of the hundred hides'.
- 62, 13, read (with all texts except L) Mac Cécht (alliterating with romarb): so too LL 159 b z.
- 63, 4, delete 'smooth'.
- 63, 7-8, read 'the serpent's filth made the stream murmur and seethe, without delay'.
- 63, 11, for 'doings' read 'nature'.

- p.
 63, 16, for 'worse than any wolf-pack' read 'above every resort'.
 63, 19–20, read 'its evil ashes,—no ornament to the region'.
 65, 10, for 'comely' read 'a mass,' i.e. a solid defence.
 65, 11, read 'riveted spear'.
 67, 4, for 'journey' read 'madness'.
 68, 31, read perhaps mad t'aire, 'if you will heed': cf. masa th'aire, Sil. Gad. 237, 7.
 69, 39, for 'with lasting stain' read 'an unremitting harrying'.
 70, 49–50, read im ascaid . . . im-maslaig; see Glossary, maslaigim.
 73, 28, for 'him' read 'her'.
 74, 33, read cu trén-athach, 'gustily'.
 76, 62, read muin-chaím.
 76, 79, read noi mbliaadna [fichet].
 77, 65, read 'thou hast my leave'.
 79, 1, read 'to her foot', i.e. 'from head to foot'.
 79, 12, read 'thou wast a high rock'.
 79, 15, read 'across the stream of Segais'.
 80, 8, read forad ba Setnai, 'the seat that was Setna's'.
 81, 4, for 'met him' read 'found it (Alend)'.
 81, 21, read 'who scarred cheeks—alas!'.
 82, 28, read ba hadba alma (E).
 82, 30, read rothairmchell.
 82, 36, read nithu (: rígú).
 82, 47, read it é.
 83, 25–28, arrange thus: 'in the time of Nia Corb, fierce bear, Alend, lusty nursery for heroes, was a home of herds'.
 83, 35–36, read 'he drove red spear points through kings, he chained the battalions of Ajend.'
 83, 39, for 'against' read 'upon'.
 83, 44, read 'they beat upon'.
 84, 51, read dia ríged rind, 'from his arm's tip, at arm's length'; cf.
 a hind a glace, III, 248, 91; ar bun ríged, Z.C.P. XVIII.
 423.
 84, 53, read balla = ballda, 'strong-limbed'.
 85, 55–6, read 'who bore the royal name, Alend,—the folk that was called after her was not unrepented'.

PART III.

- 2, 18, read nó in hí ben.
 3, 18, for 'jealousy' read 'emulation'.
 6, 51, read 'na rag', 'into which I shall go'; cf. III. 382, 2.
 6, 69–70, read nosaidledás, and tr. 'death and yearning (?) carried her off, increase of mourning visited her'.
 8, 78, read fetabair.
 8, 92, read chúan, 'haven'.
 8, 96, read dúir-gen.

- p.
 9, 76, read 'to the first'.
 12, 133, daith qualifies Dé.
 13, 135, read 'between them,' sc. Erimon and Patrick.
 15, 159, read 'well-furnished with ranks of men'.
 17, 188, for 'high fruition' read 'royal revenue'.
 17, 189, read perhaps 'as thou art taught'; see Contrib. dámain.
 18, 224, read clúd aithne, 'absconding with a deposit'.
 19, 232, for 'in' read 'for'.
 20, 241, read riagail, 'the Rule'.
 25, 320, read 'men dare them'.
 25, 323, for 'offers it' read 'who rules them'.
 26, L 191a has the title: Dinnsenchas Side Nectain i. Sliab in Chotaig.
 7 tairired Boinne.
 26, 12, read co Topor.
 26, 16, omit a, or read a dá ainm án.
 28, 28, read nó is Turrann (see Notes).
 36, 35, read rafeoir, 'fine grass': cf. Eriu VII, 221, st. 20.
 36, 52, read foreenn.
 44, 69, read rongab.
 45, 65, read 'hies her on her way'.
 47, 87-8, the verbs are 3 pl. pres. indie.
 48, 1, read Rúadri mae Aitte.
 50, 31-2, read tocab, dollotar: see Worthk. 235 (Nachtr. zu 188).
 52, 48, read perhaps rosbáigestar, 'engaged them' (to build raths); see prose.
 55, 8, omit '[last]'.
 55, 11-12, read 'not to put Ceilbe in verse was not lucky, O poets!'
 See Glossary, serthonn.
 56, 28, read -séthair.
 57, 23, read 'never ceasing from work in her home'.
 57, 25-28, construe dobrethnaig céilidé, 'noticed an entertainment'.
 57, 37, read 'reproached'.
 57, 40, perhaps 'her fame was impeached for what was attempted'.
 59, 63, read 'he buried'.
 59, 64, read 'Elg' (= Ireland).
 62, 108, fáid-lis, 'sod-built liss' from fót, 'sod'; cf. fid-lis, IV, 44, 14;
fót-ráth, III, 72, 83.
 63, 116, read 'was it not an obligation to bestow it on her?'
 65, 119, read 'what is due to him is little, however much it be'.

- 427, 19, read 'the far-stretching plain', and delete 'eternally'.
- 430, 50, read tog, 'choose thou!'
- 431, 46, tr. 'Muirese, ruler over the mead-rich plain'.
- 432, 2–4, remove query in 2, and tr. 'do the lords of land know from whom the plain is so named—a glory imperishable by reason of its wealth?'
- 433, 13, tr. 'Irial went on his royal journey'; tánic timehell Erend ina chuairt, prose.
- 433, 22, for 'Irial' read 'Irial's death'.
- 436, 16, read tipra fhind-glan, 'the bright pure spring'.
- 437, 8, tr. 'it is an offence against piety to till there'.
- 438, 10, read talchar.
- 438, 18, read mag-déine (L).
- 442, 27, Thurneysen, Bürgschaft, p. 34, would read cethri i ráith.
- 443, 31, for 'hard of thews' read perhaps 'mighty under water', referring to Cú Chulainn.
- 446, 80, read faithche.
- 446, 87, read is a mac.
- 450, 12, read lán-chrodaig.
- 451, 7, read perhaps 'Rí, reddener of the young shoot'.

- P.
- 452, 30, read ingeilt.
- 453, 23, read 'his cavalcade in loose order'; see Glossary, táth.
- 456, 73, read 'Ma atberad and tr. 'As to what Mider said, well for thee, Rí, if it turn out as we say'.
- 456, 87, read tecaib in fial (: lepaid).
- 457, 72, for 'overthrow' read 'bury'.
- 458, 108, read tairm tocha, 'a fitting appellation'.
- 459, 103, read 'with keen endeavour'.
- 459, 104 and 108, for 'fatal' read 'heavy'.
- 460, 24, read maidm Flesce, maidm fir-Mainne.
- 461, 11, for 'frequent' read 'seething'; see Glossary.
- 463, 35, tr. 'loftily he tamed the strife'.
- 463, 38, tr. perhaps '[victory] was granted before him': rorath must be deuterotonic (: cath).
- 464, 51, read sáir-thrin, and tr. '(the warrior was an overmatch for a powerful third)'; trín is gen. of trian, a division of territory or of troops: see Glossary; sárgad (= sárugad) before s = sárgat (: bán-mac); son = sonn, 'staff,' metaph. 'champion'. In 52 read Máinchín.
- 465, 53, read 'devoid of martial spirit'.
- 467, 74, read 'no dubious right'.
- 467, 80, read 'didst raise up'.
- 478, 249, Scél Tellaig Temra = Suidigud Tellaich Temra (see Ériu iv, 121, seq.).
- 486, Ceilbe. Y's copy of this poem is by a different hand from the rest of the Y-Dindshenches.
494. Fornocht. The attribution to Find is not in YH.
- 500, note on Crimthann Nia Náir. The poem in Meyer's Fianaigecht, p. 4, makes Nár father of Fuinche, who is mother of Fothad Cananne; Fothad inherits Crimthann's treasures. In Mesca Ulad (Todd Lect. i. 54) Crimthann is slain by Cú Chulainn.
- 501, Delete note on 37, and see Index of Proper Names.
- 505, Mag Mugna. As to Trefuilngid Treórach see Suidigud Tellaich Temra, Ériu iv. 167.
- 507, Sliab Maige I and II. See the prose legend printed at p. 495.
- 509, The variant of lines 13–16 referred to in my apparatus criticus runs thus in LcSH: Ocht cét bliadhán, is fir so, iarna áirem etorro ó gein na habann, fir dam, nocor'maid in loch lindglan.
- S₃ has:
- Caocca a cethair da mhile iar ecomairiomh cert-rímhe ó gein, etc.*
- 520, on Cend Cuirrig, 17, in the translation réad 'And he had to wife Téite' and 'Currech mae Cathair'. Cf. Meyer's Fianaigecht, p. 4, and Silv. Gad. ii, 519.
- 527, Slige Dala. Airne Fíngein, in the form which survives, is later than the Dindshenches.

- p.
 532, 12, read cen esba aire do dénum, 'without composing a wanton satire' (R. Flower).
 535, Ath Cliath Medraige. The incident of the fight at the ford is taken from Táin Bó Regamain; see Ir.T. II. 2, 230.
 539, Loch Dergdeire. See Thurneysen's Heldensage, p. 506.
 547, note on 12–16. Bun Silend is mentioned in ds. of Carn Furbaide, iv. 32, 16.
 548, Delete note on Mag nÁi, 22; richid has i long.
 551, Loch Cé. As to the situation of Mag Tuired see H. Morris' article in the Journal of Royal Society of Antiquaries (Ireland), Vol. 58, p. 111 seq.
 552. Loch Néill, 7. As to Conall Collomrach son of Eterscél see Z.C.P. VIII. 292, and Rawl. B. 502, 136a1–4.
 554. Loch Dechet, 14. Ruad ua Maine Milscothi is not mentioned in the prose; in the poem he seems to be identical with Aed Ruad mac Baduирn. It looks as if the poet of Loch Dechet had confused two distinct persons mentioned in the ds. of Ess Ruaid, Aed ruad m. Baduирn and Ruad ingen Maine Milscothaig.

PART IV.

- 2, 4, read in Ruaid-essa = Essa Ruaid. As to the drowning of Aed ruad, cf. Todd Lect. iii, 181.
 2, 13, tig, 'massive'.
 4, 46, read condorsala, 'which confronted her' (con-lá).
 8, 42, read rogab cor 'na thuarastol, 'who took surety for his wage'.
 10, 32, read radelbus dia sluag.
 12, 7, read 's a nige, 'and to wash'.
 12, 16, for 'nimble' tr. 'right gentle'.
 14, 24, for 'spell' tr. 'seizure': see Glossary, recht.
 16, Dubthir 8, tr. 'the divisions were not equitable'.
 18, 18, tingair, 'asks'.
 20, 18, for rith, 'in due season': cf. Dinn. rith plúir, etc.
 22, 55, read eo ngall-acht gann, 'with rough soldier-deed'.
 28, 36, read acht mad messe.
 30, Carn F. 10, read do beith hi fail Ch.
 36, 21, read (foichle a scéil! foceirt in sluag i trom-nél) and tr. 'When he told of the loss of Mac C. (etc.)—mark the tale! it cast the host' (etc.). A word (a name?) is missing after éccid.
 38, 31, read perhaps birt lüic: cf. note on 34.
 44, 14, tr. 'of the wood-built keep'.
 48, 93–6, L's arrangement of this quatrain after 104 gives the best connection with 105–8, and is supported by conachlann (uaimm) of dergg-ár... Dorat. In 96, ina thóraind means 'as a tourney-ground': the ford was the key-position.

- p.
 60, 44, read co hor Banna, and tr. 'to the shore of the green-crested Bann'.
 64, 75, tr. 'from her thenceforth'.
 68, 149, read ordan-mac.
 72, 64, read perhaps gnó-thig as mó gnáthaig, 'the fair home she most frequents'.
 80, 6, perhaps 'without flow of tide, ever full'; see Glossary, bara.
 80, 31, remove brackets, and tr. 'hail to him who fixed their place'; see Glossary, mertainm.
 86, 91, tr. 'in exchange for earth'.
 90, 15, tr. 'desired not (to return) to his home'.
 92, Ailech 6, read perhaps Fóbla (cf. l. 48, cuaird = cuairt), and tr. 'lord over Fotla's feast'.
 92, 11, read deg-maicc (: Cermait).
 100, Ailech II 7, read for cai (or aice).
 100, 10, read lás tucad.
 100, 12, read rofecht, 'was built'.
 102, 35. There was a tale, now lost, called Argain Ailig for Néit mac Indaí; see O'Curry, MS. Mat. 590.
 104, 40, read gním glonda, 'deed of violence'? see Glossary.
 104, 46, toimseach trebaid, 'a rent-yielding tilth'; see Glossary.
 106, Ailech III 3, tr. (probably) 'red its spear-points (or wounds').
 108, 20, icht, 'clemency'.
 108, 26, read for Aed.
 112, 72, tr. 'a rath of fair plots of land'.
 116, 108, tr. 'we are told'.
 116, 113, read aech molad (M).
 120, 147, read for in domun.
 122, 17, read ó robo thrá, and tr. 'Heavy the hour, since he was doomed'; there is a play on the name Tromda.
 124, Ard M. 15, tr. 'it was no pauper'sfeat' (because it brought her a great possession).
 132, 19–20, tr. '[Cú Chulainn] would not have carried off his venture safely, [and won] the spoil,' etc. See Glossary, oscur. The rendering in the text will not do; the boy is the 'visitor', not Cú Chulainn.
 146, 2, read mara (f)rismben B., 'of the sea that beats upon B.'; see Glossary, frismbenaim.
 148, 37–8, a cur i táin, 'her laying to rest'.
 154, 123, tr. 'the wheel of Flann's Fál' (i.e. of Erin).
 156, 129, tr. 'the green possessed three marvels'.
 156, 143, tr. 'the Hound's Rath, the Whelp's Rath'.
 158, 163, tuir théite, 'the chiefs of assembly'.
 160, 219, tr. perhaps 'each full load that follows us'.
 162, 226, dothech, 'an ill abode', sc. Hell.
 166, 55–6, read nert, foderc, and tr. 'Nemed, whose strength was not in strife' (but in sanctity).
 168, 23, in sód, 'the turning'.

- P.
- 168, 39, read i maig nár níthach a nert, 'in a plain whose strength was not in strife'.
- 170, 22, donn-chuan, 'noble home'.
- 174, 41, read Sruith nEncha, 'the Scaldercrow's River'.
- 176, 12, read óisces.
- 176, Inb. C. 3, uais ella, 'supreme pang'.
- 177, 1, read 'A swine-herd deemed high of spirit'.
- 177, 2, read 'fixed it'; see Glossary, mertain.
- 180, 19, read eo ticht, inf. of ticcim, 'so much as to come after him'.
- 182, 10, read do tháir-brig, 'for humiliation, in submission', = a ngial-lacht in the prose.
- 184, 20, read re (= fri) dag-eól and tr. 'a part of D.'s exploits, under guidance with good knowledge'.
- 186, Tlachtga 2, forbaid, 'shroud'; see Glossary.
- 194, Mag L. 10, tr. 'Its weighty paunch'.
- 196, Odras 3, airme, 'of weapons, armed' (?).
- 196, 20, ba samla, 'was a phantom' (?).
- 198, 21, tarb in tnúthach, 'the high-spirited bull'.
- 198, 23, láthach, tr. 'in heat'.
- 202, Cerna 8, tr. 'that made many an essay in smooth poesy'.
- 202, 12, Donngaise is gen. of Donngal; so in 206, 68, Congaile gen. of Congal.
- 206, 69, omit Is.
- 204, 37, in dul, 'the snare' (metaph.).
- 210, Irarus 2, read fir fobaid, and tr. 'the story of a stirring man'.
- 212, 18, tr. 'not extensive was their journey'.
- 218, Lia L. 7, read ciarb.
- 220, Luibnech 7; literally, 'it was not scantiness with slight value for them'.
- 222, 10, tr. 'by the follower of Niall, that noble of the Gaels'.
- 224, 32, tr. 'its mighty mouth was (like) the hole under a quern'.
- 226, 9, read té, 'hot' from the forge.
- 226, Tráig T. 15, read fri dáil dé, 'by day': cf. III. 332, 27, dáil fri dé.
- 228, 13, read ina báig.
- 228, 27, tréith is adj. gen. of triath, 'captain'.
- 236, 20, read Ulad.
- 236, 29, diles dé, 'proper for him'.
- 236, 39, tr. 'that has accompanied me': see Glossary, dechraim.
- 238, Dr. S. II 6, read a deg-dalta.
- 242, 18, read for domun.
- 244, 47, read conattib.
- 244, 53, read for each rét.
- 246, 73-4, read perhaps im óenda sám . . . ndlochtán, and tr. 'One day I was alone and at ease,' etc.
- 246, Lége 9, tr. 'of firm-set Clarach'.
- 254, 43, read dotuit le fer, gním gosa.
- 256, Loch L. 5, tr. 'the sea-faring warrior'.

- p.
 256, 11, tr. 'and it became a lake unfailing'.
 260, 11, read Gaible 7 Gai Glas: the poet alludes to Fid nGaible and Móin Gai Glais. M.G.G. is therefore in Uí Failge.
 260, 26, read co lin anglond, 'with all his exploits'.
 262, 33, tr. 'for he was no dissembler'.
 262, 55, read 'Eber fixed their place'; see Glossary, mertaim.
 262, 60, már, 'place of burial'.
 270 (verse) 9, Meltair lem, perhaps 'Let me have use of': see Glossary.
 280, 1: omit 'Bethra, Andiled at' (printer's error).
 286, 33, read Is iat.
 286, 51, tachud perhaps = toiched, 'law-suit': see Glossary.
 306, 22, read perhaps cloch-daire, 'forest of stone' (Bergin).
 308, 54, Tálchind, 'the Adzeheads', i.e. the tonsured monks.
 310, 19, tr. 'there came upon him forthwith an ague in the ship'.
 314, 3, notairg, 'comes'? from toirgim (doroichim).
 314, 11, tācha does not rhyme with rātha.
 316, 38, read perhaps Ráthmaige = Mag Rátha: there was apparently a Mag Rátha in Leinster, see L. na gCeart, 40.
 318, 17–18, tr. 'For every tenant till now for whom a title indefeasible because of its justice has been found—the inherent right of its origin cleaves to it,' etc.
 324, Mag D.G. 9, Ma's é, 'in sooth'.
 325, 1, read 'continually'.
 330 (poem), 2, tr. 'scarred by polished spears': see Glossary, róen.
 330, 13, read perhaps nírbo d'uabur, 'it was not out of pride'.
 330, 16, forbaid, 'wrapping' or 'shroud': see Glossary.
 332, 34, mind ngaible, 'bracelet of my hand-grip': see Glossary, gabul.
 336, Dún Cuire. Ascribed in L to Cormac mac Culennáin.
 340, 32, read diarb hi and tr. 'whereof came this—the monstrous slaughter'; cf. ní hé in faídíud fás, III. 50, 38, and ep. III. 148, 4; III. 340, 38; III. 340, 48; III. 208, 39; IV. 42, 36; IV. 194, 2.
 342, 31. A scribal note at foot of LL 169b has: Uasal ingen Subni meic Colmain ben Fhaelain ríg Lagen.
 342, 42–44, read 43 as parenthesis, and tr. tictis dar clochán, 'came across the causeway'.
 344, 63, see the list in LL 311a 28, seq. = Rawl. B 502, 116cl–40 (in inverse order).
 346, 97, cuir, 'firm-set'.
 358, 104, tr. 'it went against them (they could not endure) to avoid him'; cf. ticfa frim, 'it will come against me', R.C. xiv, 420y; inné truma h'eire thic riut? Lia Fáil I. 80z.
 360, 132, read 'ma and tr. 'for the bloody deeds thou hast done'.
 360, 134, tr. perhaps 'without terms for a wounded man', sc. Aed himself.
 362, 176, keep rabais: cf. Togail Tébe 853, co rabais (2 sg.).
 366, Fert Medba. In Hy Fiachra, Medb is said to be buried at Cruachan.

- p.
 370, 34, read perhaps a fodba, 'his spoils' (: corma).
 370, 39, thrétaig, 'rich in flocks'.
 389–390. As to the sources of Aided Echach see also Zimmer, Kuhn's Zts. XXVIII 676 A.
 391, Benn Boguine. In Cóir Anmann § 210 (Ir.T. III. 374) the slaughter of cattle is attributed to Enna Boguine (son of Conall Gulban, Z.C.P. VIII. 300, 31). A different ds. of Benn Boguine will be found in Archiv. Celt. Lex. III. 324: this Benn Boguine is certainly in Donegal.
 395, The notes in LU are probably derived from the Dindshenchas: see Heldensage, 31.
 401, Ailech II. On the poem Cind cethri ndíne see MacNeill, Archivum Hibernicum ii. 40. There is another copy in S (Stowe D II 2).
 402. The metre of this poem is snedbairdne: this term is used when the caesura falls regularly after the eighth syllable, Ir. Text. iii. I, p. 352, § 32a and c (letter from R. Thurneysen, who does not recognise such a caesura as do|róni).
 413. As to the topography of the poem on Taitiu see an article in JRSA Sept. 1930, pp. 113–129, by H. Morris. He may be right in treating Cairpre (line 23) as a place-name.
 416, note on 105–120, for Dóllais read Dál Cais.
 419, Sliab Fuait I. On the topography of this poem, see MacNeill's notes in JRSA 1927, pp. 156–8.
 420, note on Sl. Fuait II 42. The paragraph about Cenn Berraide is also in Edinburgh Ds. 64.
 431, note on 19: scáilead is the verbal noun.
 438, Loch Aindind. A Math mac Úmóir is mentioned at LL 9 b 37.
 443, Loch Laíglinde. See also LL 5 b 24.
 447, Dubad. Cp. also ds. of Cnogba, pt. iii. 44.
 448, Áth Crocha. As to the battle of Findehora, see also Ériu x. 92.
 450, Tulach Eogain. From lines 39–40 it would seem that this hill was on Tóchar eter Dá Mag, which was near Geashill in King's Co.; see p. 445, introductory note to Mag Dumach.
 461, Cend Finichair. With the peculiar forms employed cf. some in SnR CLIII.
